This part of Brookline is by no means an estate-laden area, but the neighborhoods are charming, with many older homes. "The owners bought it with the intention of doing quite a bit of work to it," says agent Chobee Hoy of Chobee Hoy Associates. They plan to put in a new kitchen but will not overhaul the interior. "You have the best of both worlds on Griggs."

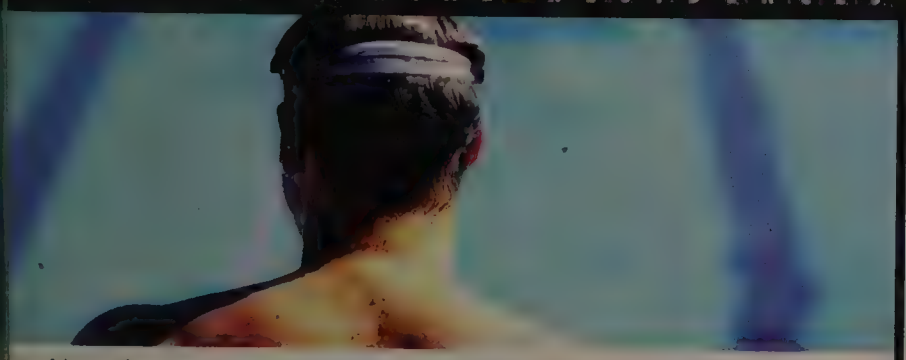
Where: South End (Worcester Street, between Shawmut and Tremont)
What: Two-plus bedroom, two-and-a-half bathroom condo in a townhouse, with off-street parking
Square footage: 2,000
Asking price: $969,000
Selling price: $950,000

The South End has experienced an enormous rebirth in the past half decade. "I am getting all the people from Beacon Hill and Back Bay who are frustrated with their search," says realtor Martyn Scott. "But it's getting harder to find something like this in the South End." You may find some duplexes in the $900,000s, but the possibility of getting a single-family home here is diminishing.

Where: Beacon Hill (1 Garden St.)
What: Four-bedroom, two-bath, "brand new" penthouse in a 1930s building, with maple floors, Irish limestone counters, private L-shaped roof deck and four 10-foot windows
Square footage: 1,450
Asking price: $999,000
Selling price: Not yet sold

John Kerry's neighborhood is arguably the most desirable address in Boston. It's the city's oldest neighborhood and thus the most prestigious (followed closely by the Back Bay, where properties tend to be a bit more spacious). This penthouse, listed by Richard Drinkwater at Otis & Ahearn Real Estate, sits above an old cigar factory.

Where: Medfield (48 Ledgetree Road)
What: Single-family home with four bedrooms (two master bedrooms), three-and-a-half baths, a huge sunroom with cathedral ceilings, a three-car garage, security system and state-of-the-art irrigation system
Square footage: 3,600, on a 34,480-square-foot lot
Asking price: $999,000 (lowered from $1.1 million)
Selling price: Not yet sold



At this writing, 13 properties are available in Medfield for around or more than a million dollars. The town got some press recently from one of the most famous sports celebrity real estate transactions to date: Curt Schilling's fire-sale purchase of Drew Bledsoe's home. The former New England Patriots quarterback bought the 26 acres on which he built the multimillion-dollar home for a mere $275,000 in the early '90s. The more modest Cape house listed above, built in 1984, is available through Ginny Olsen of ReMax Executive Realty Medfield.

CHAOS AND CONGESTION ARE IN THE FORECAST FOR CONVENTION WEEK—BUT HOW MUCH OF THAT IS REAL AND HOW MUCH IS HYPE? HERE'S WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW IF YOU'RE STICKING AROUND THE CITY

BY BROOKE LEISTER

By now, you've heard the horror stories about the Democratic National Convention. North Station will be closed. I-93 will be closed near the FleetCenter. There will be restricted security zones.

As the July 26–29 convention nears, those living and working in the city are asking how all this will affect them. With the world spotlight poised to shine on Boston, convention organizers and city officials are working to ensure the city is ready to greet the expected 35,000 attendees (including 5,000 delegates), as well as help Bostonians navigate altered T routes and road closings.

It may take some extra planning—leaving a little earlier for work and taking a different route—as well as finding some alternate hangouts while the Dems commandeer popular bars and restaurants for private parties. But while there's no doubt convention week will cause its share of headaches, those in charge hope Bostonians will take pride in showing off their city to the rest of the country. "The convention is going to be a remarkable opportunity for Boston and its residents to show the world how great the city is," says Karen Grant, communications director for Boston 2004 Inc., host committee for the Democratic National Convention.

Whether you're looking forward to the excitement or dreading the hassle, here are some things you'll need to know to navigate the city during convention week.

GETTING AROUND

MBTA press secretary Joe Pesaturo has three pieces of advice for commuters: Check to see if your regular commute is affected, be aware of alternate routes and be patient.

From July 23-30, the MBTA Green Line will end at Haymarket, and the Orange Line will not stop at North Station. The Red and Blue lines will not be affected. Commuter rail trains from the north will terminate before reaching Boston, with shuttle buses and subway trains providing connecting service. Because of I-93's proximity to the FleetCenter, where the convention will take place, buses that travel on the highway will not allow packages larger than a briefcase or pocketbook onboard. The same goes for the Orange Line.

To get the word out about service disruptions, MBTA employees will hand out booklets detailing changes during the convention. "We have an obligation to our customers and people who will be new to the system that week," Pesaturo says. MBTA police are also developing a policy to randomly inspect passengers' bags.

For those driving into the city, I-93, Rte. 1 (and the Tobin Bridge inbound to Boston), the Sumner Tunnel, the Leverett Connector and portions of Storrow Drive and Memorial Drive will close afternoons and evenings during convention week. These road closure times could change daily during the convention. "It will be set the day of, by the Secret Service," says Jon Carlisle, spokesman for the state's Executive Office of Transportation and Construction. "They've told us they want wide latitude over those closures."

As Democratic presidential hopeful Sen. John Kerry (or any other dignitary, including former presidents Carter and Clinton) moves through the city, some roads may briefly close while the motorcade passes. Boston Police Department spokesman Lt. Kevin Foley says he can't say when or where this could happen, but says it should cause little inconvenience. (To get the most current information on traffic and mass-transit restrictions, check Boston 2004's Web site. See box.)

For those hoping to get an up close and personal look at the convention, don't expect to get anywhere near the FleetCenter itself. Foley says only those with convention credentials are allowed inside the fenced-in security zone. The security area stretches from the Charlestown Bridge down Causeway Street, past the FleetCenter and the Thomas P. O'Neill Federal Building, extending north to Spaulding Rehabilitation Hospital and to the Charles River Basin area.

The triangle bordered by North Washington Street, New Chardon Street, Merrimac Street and Causeway will also be surrounded by a security fence, and open only to pedestrians. Delivery drivers with photo identification and proof of purchase orders can make deliveries before noon, Foley says.

While the daily schedule has not been finalized, traditionally convention activity takes place from about 4:30 pm to between 11 pm and midnight. Throughout the week, there will be delegation events inside the FleetCenter and throughout the city.

Stephen Sullivan, general manager of MetroCab Association, says convention week will cause its share of headaches, but his 410 cabbies will work around the difficulties. "We're more familiar with the streets than the average person," he says.

N THE DNC ZONE

Those who work around the FleetCenter are greeting the convention with a mixture of excitement and trepidation. Justin Moorehouse, chef at McGann's Pub on Portland Street, plans to stay with friends in the North End rather than commute from his Brookline home. "Everyone I've talked to has taken a negative stance on it. People are worried about getting into work. Everybody will be happy to see it done. It's a hassle," says Moorehouse.

At Hilton's Tent City on Friend Street, manager Jeremy Shugar is hoping for increased business from convention attendees and curiosity seekers. "As a business, given the fact that so many people are coming into the city and they're going to be here, we remain optimistic," says Shugar. "I'm confident there will be an increase in business where people will want to come down here and check it out. If anything, the convention will bring people [to the area]." While many are bemoaning the expected traffic snarls and tight security, Shugar plans to employ a wait-and-see attitude. "I think it's going to be hoppin'," he says. "It's going to be a party."

Nearby, at the Fours on Canal Street, owner Peter Colton says the Kentucky and Maryland delegations, as well as a local Teamsters union, have booked private parties during the week. Since the FleetCenter has been closed in preparation for the convention, Colton is looking forward to the crowds in the neighborhood.

'OLITICAL PARTYING

There's no doubt people will be partying down in Beantown. Between 750 and 1,000 events, both private and public, are planned throughout the week, according to Boston 2004's Grant. The festivities kick off Saturday night at the new Boston Convention and Exhibition Center with a private party for the expected 15,000 media members covering the convention. The following evening, more than 30 venues throughout the city, including the Jorge Hernandez Cultural Center, the State House and the Boston Public Library, host parties for private delegations.

For those looking to take part in the action but lacking convention credentials, there'll be other ways to feel like part of the festivities. Throughout July, Boston 2004 is sponsoring Celebrate Boston, which features events throughout the city, culminating with a public gala on City Hall Plaza on the eve of the convention. Or for $1,000, you can rub elbows with Ben Affleck, Joe Pantoliano and Christina Ricci at the 2004 Benefit Gala presented by the Creative Coalition and the Recording Industry Association of America. Tickets are still available for the July 28 event taking place at Louis Boston.

If you'd rather laugh at the candidates than schmooze, head to Jimmy Tingle's Off Broadway Theater in Somerville's Davis Square and check out political humorists and satirists like Lewis Black, Janeane Garofalo and Mort Sahl at the Un-Conventional Comedy Convention: A Celebration of Political Humor. "I wanted to do something special in the weeks leading up to the convention," Tingle says. For Tingle, the comedy convention, which takes place July 7–31, is an ideal way not only to highlight Davis Square, but also to help those who aren't attending the convention enjoy the politicized atmosphere.

While there are no plans to extend the operating hours of bars and restaurants or lift the smoking ban, according to the mayor's office, there's no doubt that conventioneers will be hitting the town once their work is done. "From what I hear, a lot of nightclubs and restaurants are booked. Your best bet is to find something outside the city," says Heather Walker, director of marketing for the Rack, which is booked for private parties every night the convention is in town. Non-politicos can celebrate Thursday, July 22, when the Rack hosts the DNC (Do Not Commute) Survival Party, with free pool, free admission for women and complimentary appetizers. "It's for everyone to have a big blowout bash. It's basically to enjoy your last night in Boston before we turn it over to the conventioneers," says Walker. Michael Carlisle, general manager of Parris and Ned Devine's (both owned by the Briar Group), predicts the convention won't have much effect on most Bostonians' social lives. "I don't think it'll affect the bar and club scene much because it's over by the weekend," he says. Carlisle adds that the after-work nightlife scene should remain the same, since the convention is expected to run until 11 each night.

Stuart Masure, general manager of Boston Beer Works Canal Street, says that while BBW's two Boston restaurants (the other is on Brookline Avenue) have booked some private parties, they'll be open for lunch and dinner during convention week. "From the restaurant's perspective, we're really excited for the energy that will be brought to the city," he says. "As far as we're concerned we're going to move forward with business as usual for our customers."

Diane Mantouvalos, spokeswoman for the nightclub Saint, says the hot spot expects to be busy: "We do expect to be inundated with visitors from the convention. We're considered the fun spot for older clientele. We're going to be very accessible because of our hours, format and our ability to take care of VIPs."

When the Dems come to town, the city is also going to look its best. Don't be surprised to see more street sweepers around town as the convention nears. In May, each city neighborhood participated in the second annual Boston Shines event. More than 6,700 volunteers planted flowers and saplings and removed 905 tons of trash from sites around the city. According to Michael Kineavy, director of the Mayor's Office of Neighborhood Services, as the convention nears, his office may contact neighborhood representatives to perform touch-ups on key spots.

Remember, plans are changing all the time, and as with anything else in life, nobody can truly predict what real impact the Democratic National Convention will have on Bostonians and their lives. Bottom line: Expect delays and inconvenience, and a whole lot of revelers dressed in red, white and blue. IB

FROM RIALTO'S BALLOT BURGER TO THE KELLS' ROCK THE VOTE LOBSTER, BOSTON RESTAURANTS ARE GETTING CREATIVE WITH THEIR MENUS TO SERVE HUNGRY CONVENTIONEERS.

BY JUDITH GAINES ILLUSTRATION BY DEREK AYLWARD

On a late-spring day at the Kells in Allston, general manager Bob O'Guin and kitchen supervisor Steve Ngo are celebrating the completion of the restaurant/nightclub's extreme makeover and happily preparing for the arrival of the Democratic National Convention. The dark, heavy wood paneling in what had been a traditional Irish pub has been replaced by a hipper, more colorful ambience and decor intended to suggest a jungle with firecrackers. The new menu features a playful array of drinks, which the proprietors hope will lure conventioneers their way.

Among 10 new mixed beverages is the Goodbye, Bush, a potent and delicious blend of banana liqueur, cream and rum that O'Guin says he hopes will help Democrats give the nation's top banana "a good, swift kick" out of the White House. Other libations include the Rock the Vote Lobster, a reddish drink with grenadine, coconut rum and vodka; and the Beacon Hill Mama, a lively citrus blend with four rums, intended to honor Teresa Heinz Kerry. The showstopper may be Kerry's Bowl, a formidable, 45-ounce concoction that, O'Guin quips, "hopefully will encourage [John] Kerry to make a bold statement at the convention."

Kells execs hope that the club's exotic drinks and Asian-style appetizers, plus the energy of two disc jockeys playing their own platters on adjacent dance floors, will draw Democrats—and anyone else who wants to join in—to come in and let loose here when the convention comes to town.

Traffic will likely be horribly congested, security measures may leave everyone feeling exasperated and on edge, but throughout the Boston area, chefs and restaurateurs will do their best to feed and fete the Democrats during convention week, July 26–29. Many will offer special dishes or drinks, politically or patriotically themed menu items, or prix-fixe menus with a special touch. Most will be open more hours than normal. Some will reconfigure their eating areas to add more seats. And apart from some special VIP events, the general public is welcome in most cases to sample the convention fare.

At Rialto, in Harvard Square's Charles Hotel, chef Jody Adams aims to create a relaxing, casual atmosphere with several dishes she hasn't offered before. "This convention is about socializing and connecting," she says, so she will focus less on her trademark cutting-edge haute cuisine and more on "comforting food that people can enjoy without having to pay much attention to it."

The dishes will have Adams' signature touch, but with some differences. For example, she promises to put a hamburger on her menu for the first time: "I'm calling it a Ballot Burger, a classic with a surprise to be revealed. I know people love hamburgers, but I will not keep it on the menu forever. Just like the DNC, it will come to town for a few days and then it will leave."

Adams also will serve a Revolution Salad, incorporating whatever produce local farmers send her that week, a Liberty Lobster Club Sandwich featuring New England's celebrated crustacean, and a Red, White and Basil sandwich with tomato, basil and mozzarella, a combination that Adams says typifies the essence of summer.

L'Espalier chef and owner Frank McClelland is offering a first-time novelty to anyone who wants to come, conventioneer or not: lunch. The menu, he says, will include politically themed dishes inspired by local New England produce and his own sense of whimsy. He probably will offer a red, white and blue entrée, for example, such as striped bass with fried clams atop a velvety blue potato puree with watermelon fumé and white radish sprinkles.

> "In the spirit of true Democrats, we promise to increase portion size and cut prices, while moving the economy forward."
> –Spire Executive Chef Gabriel Frasca

Chef Philip Aviles of Masa, in the South End, says he intends to add a Chipotle Mini-Burger with Kerry Corn Salsa to his bar menu, as well as a drink named for Teresa Heinz Kerry, the Teresarita. With a nod to the Heinz ketchup in her background, it will be a V8-based drink with chipotle puree, onion, lime juice and tequila—a spicy blend for an often outspoken woman.

At Spire, in the Nine Zero hotel, executive chef Gabriel Frasca hopes his convention week menu will capture the essence of the Democratic Party. He isn't sure exactly what that is, "but in the spirit of true Democrats, we promise to increase portion size and cut prices, while moving the economy forward," he quips. He notes that the convention dates coincide with one of the best food weeks of the year, when many local fruits and vegetables, including Massachusetts strawberries and Maine blueberries, will be at their peak.

Chef Anthony Susi also intends to showcase local produce. The menu at his North End restaurant, Sage, will be "more New Englandy than normal," he says. Susi expects to cook dishes such as poached cod with potatoes and lemon zest, lobster chowder, a clambake dinner served in a terra-cotta pot, and cod fritters.

Additions to the menu at Bricco, in the North End, will be elegant but simple, according to chef Marisa Iocco. She plans to create a special piatto unico, a one-plate meal featuring two or three kinds of fish, some sautéed fresh vegetables and a little pasta. And in honor of presumptive Democratic nominee John Kerry, she will offer the K-Negrone, a drink made with Campari, sweet vermouth and gin. It's a perfect pairing with pizza, she says.

Conventioneers at the Langham Hotel (formerly Le Méridien) will find a special turndown treat on their pillow each night: a red, white and blue, donkey-shaped cookie. Julien, the hotel's main restaurant, will offer a White House dessert made with white chocolate petit fours, and a Boston Presidential Cocktail consisting of Stoli Razberi vodka, blue curacao and native cranberry juice. "It's all part of our 'Road to Washington' campaign," says spokesperson Kara Colaneri.

At Grotto Restaurant on Beacon Hill, chef-owner Scott Herritt hopes to accommodate people who decide to stay put after work rather than fight the traffic to get home. He's creating a special community table where locals can commiserate over a three-course meal priced at $29.04.

Even some restaurants that aren't offering new menu items will do business differently during convention week. Meritage, in the Boston Harbor Hotel, is already booked just about solid throughout that period, says chef Daniel Bruce. He's not adding anything unusual to the menu. Rather, he says, he's just trying to keep things "as normal as possible" during the onslaught. But like many chefs, he'll be catering several late-night parties and extending his hours of operation to include lunch.

And for those who want to enjoy restaurant fare without navigating convention traffic, the Office Bar & Grill is offering free delivery from 11 am to 2 am during convention week and the week before. Customers who stop in can get a free slice of pizza with a drink purchase.

With all the anticipated transportation difficulties, highway closings and the like, David James, pastry chef at Le Soir, isn't sure how many convention-goers will find their way to his restaurant in Newton. But he has a novel idea that just might catch on.

"I think I'll set up an ice cream stand at the point where the I-93 detour will be," he jokes. "With all the traffic congestion there, I bet I'll make a lot of money." iB

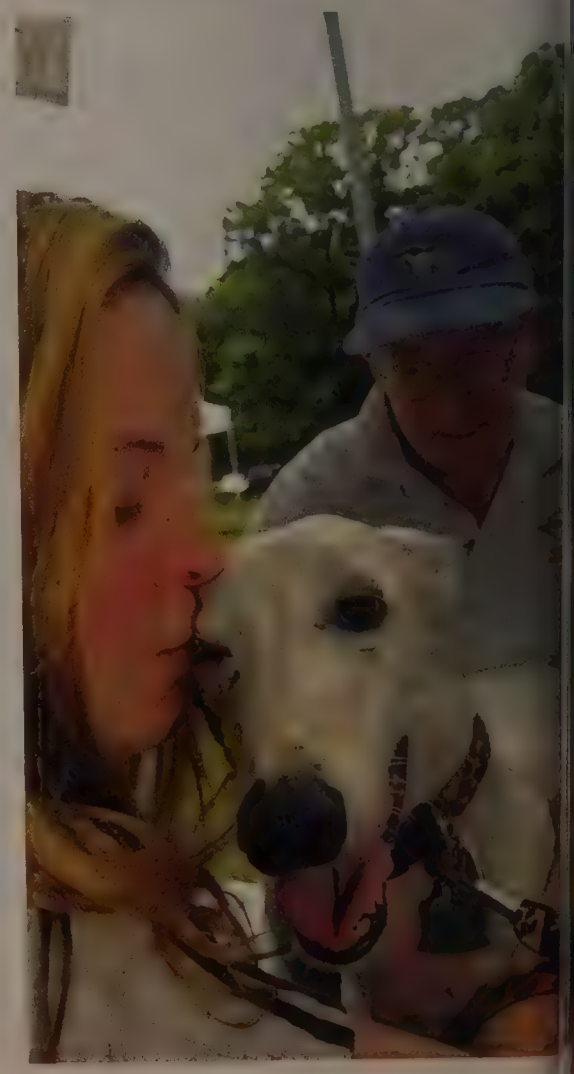
STEP-SISTERHOOD IS BEAUTIFUL

Cambridge novelist Mako Yoshikawa writes gracefully about a blended family in her new book, Once Removed. Yoshikawa has been a Fellow of Creative Writing at Harvard's Bunting Institute.

Divided into sections that focus on different characters, Once Removed tells the story of two families brought together after a death on one side and a divorce on the other. Japanese Hana, mother of Rei, meets Henry, father of the Jewish Claudia, while he's buying a wrench at the hardware store. Further wrenched is the blended family created after Henry leaves his wife and marries Hana. Though bearing the brunt of the pain caused by the divorce and family reshuffling, the ethnically and temperamentally different stepsisters Rei and Claudia see themselves as mirror reflections of each other. The women develop an intense friendship and are preoccupied with becoming the psychological biographers of their parents. Hana is a survivor of Hiroshima, and that experience resonates through her life and her children's lives, and even sideways onto her stepdaughter. Claudia, echoing her homewrecking stepmother, is having a lively, sexy affair with a married man. Rei develops cancer, and when she tells her mother about it, a roar of pain bursts out of Hana. Secrets are unburied, and the story of her life, indeed their collective life, takes on new meanings.

AESTHETIC NECESSITIES



The Museum of Useful Things, the sister store to Black Ink specializing in unique, ingenious household objects, has migrated to 49B Brattle St., near Colonial Drugs. Call 617-576-3322.

The particular sparkle in eyes of the Museum of Useful Things founders Tim and Susan Corcoran is directed at the beauty and ingenuity of the pragmatic. Items that may have begun in the industrial or agricultural realm—and how gorgeous plain stainless steel looks when it lands on Brattle Street!—lend themselves to new uses. Deliciously thin beakers, the delicate teacups of science, become glasses, with pinky-raising handles. Fat, glass inkwells, parched of ink, make pretty pencil sharpeners (meanwhile, inky fountain pens come in disposable form). The ordinary lunch-counter napkin dispenser, with plain napkins, looks lovable off the job; the metal ice cream sundae container turns out to have a romantic lip; and the little doorstop, snug as a hedgehog, just happens to double as a liftable weight. The Museum title refers to the Corcorans' display of beautiful, old not-for-sale cash registers, first-aid kits and other trinkets that inspire the reverence for the "ordinary" we feel in seeing the beauty of, for instance, a (for sale) scoop for oats. Functional, fantastic.

SOOTHE THAT PET OF YOURS

Reiki for animals is offered by Aileen D'Angelo through Hoof, Paw & Claw. Reiki clinics are held at Especially for Pets stores in Sudbury, Westborough and Acton. House calls are available, as are Tupperware-style events and some animal-and-human sessions. Call 508-852-0364.

In the sweet language of communicating with animals, Aileen D'Angelo, a Reiki practitioner, does such things as "beaming" energy at and "issuing invitations" to her four-footed clients. These include rats, cats, horses, dogs, llamas, birds (little parakeets, big parrots) and ferrets. Reiki is the ancient art whereby the practitioner taps into energy and channels it out through the hands and into whoever one is treating. This rather magical action (or almost inaction, as the hands rest quietly rather than moving as in a massage) warms and calms, somehow emanating healing powers to people, so why not to animals? The allergic, the nervous, the arthritic, the rug-piddling, the broken-of-bones, the post-surgical, and also animals with that peculiarly human love-ache called "separation anxiety" receive this treatment. One horse, so treated, got droopy eyed and even yawned. Not busy with books and taxes, animals are perhaps more receptive to this energy. Some animals seem to carry their owner's emotional burdens, as if figuratively shedding their tears for them in shivers and barking, so Fido's calming may even ease the burden on his owner.

REVIEW

WHEN IN ROMA...

Vecchia Roma offers a reason to take a trip off the beaten path in Newton.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

In my never-ending search for dining adventure, I often heed the recommendations of friends and acquaintances whose taste in food I've come to trust. Recently, such a spy tipped me off to Vecchia Roma ("Old Rome"), off the beaten path in the Nonantum section of Newton, just north of the Pike. The area is sometimes called "the Lake," but I've never succeeded in discovering the body of water to which this appellation refers. The neighborhood is Italian-American in ethnic flavor, and when its Italian-language parish, St. Jean, was merged into my own Our Lady's Church on Washington Street six or seven years ago, it added a wonderfully warm, Mediterranean ambiance to that already vibrant community. In Nonantum, one can hear Italian spoken, and when that happens my taste buds always perk up. Vecchia Roma rewarded my instincts and curiosity.

Housed in a small storefront on Watertown Street (Route 16), near the corner of Adams Street, the restaurant has just 20 seats. Dark green wood paneling below wainscoting and exposed brick on one wall and a trompe l'oeil arcade on the other; cobalt blue glass sconces; tiny, white light bulbs tracing fanciful constellations on the ceiling, a terra-cotta tile floor; sturdy wooden chairs and crisp, white tablecloths and napkins create a down-to-earth family atmosphere.

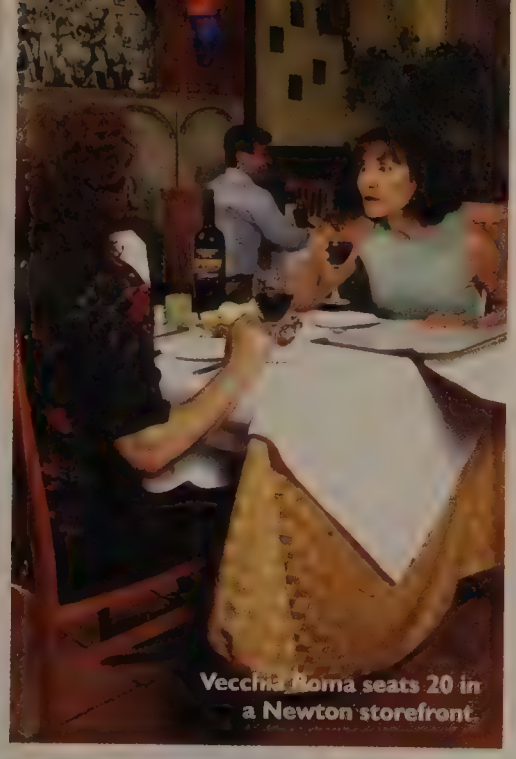
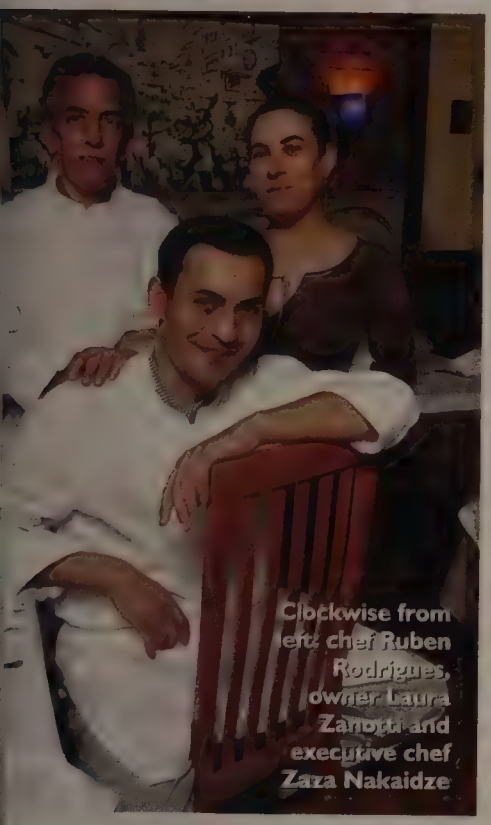
Antipasti at Vecchia Roma included melanzane ripiene ($10.95), stuffed eggplant, consisting of thin slices rolled around ricotta, smoked mozzarella and fresh herbs, the most prominent of which was minty, aromatic basil. A plum tomato sauce dressed this toothsome analogue of manicotti, with the eggplant slices substituting for the pasta tubes. Vecchia Roma's pastas were spectacular. Ravioli alla zi'Carmela ($15.95) brought a mountain of porcini-filled ravioli, in which a delicious sauce of asparagus, white wine, and herbs complemented the tender, satiny pasta that enveloped earthy, savory mushrooms, resulting in a kaleidoscope of flavors, diverse yet wholly compatible. In the festonate del convento ($13.95), broad, luxuriously textured al dente noodles provided a superb vehicle for a robust sauce composed of eggplant, cherry tomatoes, mushrooms and chopped red peppers. The mouth-pleasing texture of both pastas alone would have made these dishes memorable; that they came dressed in imaginatively conceived, well rendered sauces made them all the more enjoyable.



Main courses sustained the high standards set by the pastas. Arrosto di maiale ripieno ($16.95), roast pork stuffed with artichoke hearts, sausage and Asiago cheese, resembled a classic stuffed veal breast, with flavorful pork shoulder, roasted to a tender, succulent turn, replacing the veal. The multifaceted stuffing and rich, well-crafted demi-glaze gravy made this dish so rich, and the garnish of sautéed rice studded with asparagus and porcini mushrooms made it so filling, that I ended up bringing most of it home to enjoy for lunch the next day. Vecchia Roma offers saltimbocca made with either veal or chicken ($17.95 and $15.95 respectively). I chose the more traditional veal. These tender cutlets, layered with sweet-salty prosciutto and mushrooms, seasoned with aromatic sage and garlic, and sauced with a white wine reduction of the cooking juices, gave testimony to the linguistic derivation of the name saltimbocca ("leaps into the mouth"). The vegetables served with the veal, a colorful scoop of flavorful squash and a small bundle of firm, fresh, bright green beans whimsically wrapped in a thin cucumber slice, pleased both eye and palate.

Rack of lamb ($24.95), the third of the trio of meats we tried on successive visits, featured five hefty ribs, roasted to a rich brown on the outside and medium rare—pink verging on red—within, as ordered. A sauce of rosemary and extra-virgin olive oil, and a generous helping of cheesy scalloped potatoes made this a filling feast. Venturing from meat to seafood, the salmone all' antica ($18.95) showed that Zaza Nakaidze, Vecchia Roma's talented executive chef, has the versatility to handle fish with the same first-rate results he achieves with meat. This thick, moist filet of lovely pink salmon, served with an aromatic white wine sauce redolent of thyme and garnished with tangy-sweet red and white grapes, combined first-rate flavor, texture and color. As befitted the late spring season, spears of tender, fresh asparagus rounded out the bountiful plates of both salmon and lamb.



A small statue of an aproned chef in white toque stands guard before Vecchia Roma's quasi-open kitchen, flanked by large glass-front refrigerated case displaying extravagant-looking dessert treats, including the justly famous products from Milan's Bindi company. Passing on the impressive lineup of confections—flash-frozen in Italy and shipped to the U.S. where they are thawed to a state of perfect freshness—we opted for the restaurant's homemade desserts, each $7. The tiramisù served in a tall parfait glass, suffered from his presentation, dry near the top but be-oming moister and more flavorful as I dug ward the bottom. Better was the bread udding, liberally doused with rum that ffset the sweetness of the caramel sauce, nd finished with a generous dollop of ightly sweetened whipped cream.

Vecchia Roma maintains a decent wine st, with some customer-friendly choices the lower price ranges. A bottle of 2002 orante Montepulciano di Molise ($22), good table wine from an Adriatic ovince east of Rome, had decent struc-re and good acid, making it a suitable mpanion to the food. Wines by the ass included Montepulciano d'Abruzzi d Chianti, each $6, decent but unre-arkable. A request for water at Vecchia oma yielded a small bottle of mineral ater for $3—as is generally the case in aly, the management seemed loath to rve tap water.

The single exception to the uniformly gh quality of the food at Vecchia Roma s the hapless antipasto Italiano ($12.95), assortment of cured meats, vegetables d cheese. It arrived in a muddled heap on a small plate, making it soggy and uninteresting. The salami had a soft, somewhat mealy texture and was sliced far too thick. Prosciutto and mortadella were better, but together with the roasted red pepper strips and artichoke hearts, they too suffered from the ambient sogginess. Only the hunk of Crotonese cheese, a marvelously dry, sharp cheese that resembled provolone, escaped from this general shortcoming, standing out as the best thing on the plate by far. My disappointment at the quality of this dish would hardly merit mention but for its extreme departure from the standard set by the remainder of the restaurant's offerings. But then again, a subpar antipasto doesn't implicate the culinary talents of the chef.

Warm, inviting hospitality and generally attentive and efficient service prevailed on both of my visits. The only lapse occurred one evening when the waiter brought the antipasto and pasta simultaneously instead of successively, as we thought we had requested, but since we ordered both courses to share, the miscommunication was wholly understandable. Atkins, Schmatkins

Power to the pastry chefs… Pizza, chocolate, ice cream!

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

If you glanced at pastry chef Rick Katz's career stops over the past several years—Lumiere, Metro, Locke-Ober—you might assume he's a launch 'em and leave 'em kind of guy. And you might question his long-term commitment to his forthcoming restaurant, a pizza and ice cream café tucked inside the elegant new Atelier 505 building. But you'd be overlooking his eight-year tenure at Legal Sea Foods, where he initially worked with Jasper White to establish an in-house bakery, assumed the role of executive pastry chef, and where he still consults part-time. And once you take into consideration his acknowledged "fussiness," his extensive experience, and his age—he's 50—it makes sense that he'd want to run his own show.

Rick Katz is preparing to open Picco in August.

But for Katz, the decision was a long time coming. "After I closed the Fenton wood Bakery in Newton years ago," he says, "I swore I'd never open another place [of my own] again." Things change, and now Katz is eagerly anticipating the late-August opening of Picco.

"It's an acronym for 'pizza and ice cream company,' and also in Italian it means summit, or peak," he explains. At Picco, lunch and dinner will be served seven days a week, prices will be reasonable and quality will be top-notch. Expect a slightly chewy, virtually soggy-proof artisanal pizza crust whose depth and flavor comes from long, slow fermentation—"a crust with a lot of character," says Katz. Also on the menu: soup, salad, sandwiches, and dessert pizzas topped with Scharffen Berger chocolate. Mmmmm.

SECOND COURSE

The multitalented Lora Brody—chocolate diva, prolific cookbook author and noted photographer (a Cape Cod photo of hers recently graced the cover of the Boston Globe Magazine)—is also a hands-on multitasker. In the midst of promoting her latest book, Chocolate American Style, Brody ventured to the tiny town of Monterey in western Mass. to help her sons Max and Sam launch a new restaurant, The Night Kitchen. "I worked on the line the first week," she says proudly.

Pastry chef Lee Napoli, who most recently has been dividing her time between Sandrine's in Harvard Square and Dedo in the Theater District, is spending one day every week on a new project: Dolci Napoli, her own line of chocolates. She's slipped a few onto the dessert menu at Dedo and relied on word-of-mouth to bring her sweets to the attention of potential customers before she devotes more time to the business in the fall.

Napoli knows her dark gems of hedonism, with fillings like chocolate poblano ganache, are not for everyone. "I want to keep it a little exclusive," she says. "I don't want them everywhere."

Schedule? What schedule? Ed Doyle, former executive chef at the Seaport Hotel's Aura, reports he's "crazy busy" with a slew of consulting projects while simultaneously grappling with the "limitless bureaucracy" involved in opening his dream restaurant in Charlestown. "It's amazing anything gets built in Boston," he says. "I have no idea when there will be a breakthrough." We'll keep you posted. IB

Performing Arts: Turning Japanese

Not since Cirque du Soleil has there been a performance in town that's so much fun to pronounce. Kabuki—the traditional Japanese form of theater that involves dance, music, acrobatics, theater and lots of pantomime—comes to the Cutler Majestic Theatre for four performances over three days. It's the first time a Kabuki troupe has come to Boston, and the show is presented by the Japan Society of Boston as part of its centennial celebration. During the extravagantly costumed performance, Tokyo's 55-person Heisei Nakamura-za troupe enacts two Kabuki classics, with specially constructed sets that re-create the 17th-century atmosphere of the original Nakamura-za theater in Edo. Famous Kabuki actor Nakamura Kankuro stars in the show, which is made up two performances: One is a simple comedy in which servants outsmart their master, and the other is based on a lion dance. There's a little dialogue, which is in Japanese, but English supertitles are projected. $25–$75. Cutler Majestic Theatre at Emerson College, 219 Tremont St., Boston (800-233-3123). www.maj.org.

Watch the Tour de France at Redbones.

CityScope and Tastings: French Fun

Throughout July, there are plenty of opportunities to act upon your Francophile inclinations, what with all of the Bastille Day–related food events. A handful of them stand out because they combine French culture and a certain amount of sport. The first is about as unlikely a venue for celebrating French culture as you can imagine—Davis Square barbeque joint Redbones. Here, on July 16 and 23, bikers can meet up for a Tour & Benefit Breakfast, in which cyclists do a two-hour, early-morning ride of 40 miles, followed by a power breakfast back at Redbones. While feasting on a buffet-style breakfast, riders watch live TV coverage of the Tour de France. In between the Redbones events, there's the Chefs Collaborative's annual Champagne Veuve Clicquot's Petanque Tournament, at L on July 18. You can watch restaurateurs compete against each other in a petanque tournament (think boccie, only French and with gravel) outside in the parking lot while you listen to live music and sip Champagne. Redbones, 55 Chester St., Somerville (617-628-2200), www.redbones.com, July 16 and 23, 7-11 am; $10 for breakfast. L, 234 Berkeley St., Boston (617-266-4680), July 18, 12-6 pm; free.

Shakespeare on the Common

THROUGH JULY AND AUGUST

Performing Arts: The Play's the Thing

Maybe it's a throwback to the open air of the Globe Theatre. Maybe iambic pentameter is best recited under a starry summer sky. We're not sure what it is, but around here there's enough outdoor Shakespeare going on to keep you buried in the Bard through August. Commonwealth Shakespeare Company puts on the biggest production with its ninth annual Shakespeare on the Common. This year, artistic director Steven Maler and his talented team perform Much Ado About Nothing. The comedy about jealousy, trickery and love plays on Boston Common July 10–Aug. 1 and is expected to draw more than 60,000 viewers. The CSC is also presenting A Midsummer Night's Dream on its Tour of the Parks program (July 15–21), which stops at neighborhood parks in South Boston, the North End and Dorchester. In Lenox, Shakespeare & Company's summer performances include As You Like It (through Aug. 29), Romeo and Juliet (July 8–Aug. 29) and the 45-minute tour-de-Bard, Shakespeare and the Language That Shaped a World (through Aug. 28). Last but not least, Hector, Paris, Agamemnon, Achilles and Ulysses are center-stage in the Publick Theatre's production of Troilus and Cressida (July 8–Sept. 12). See Performing Arts on page 48 for more information.

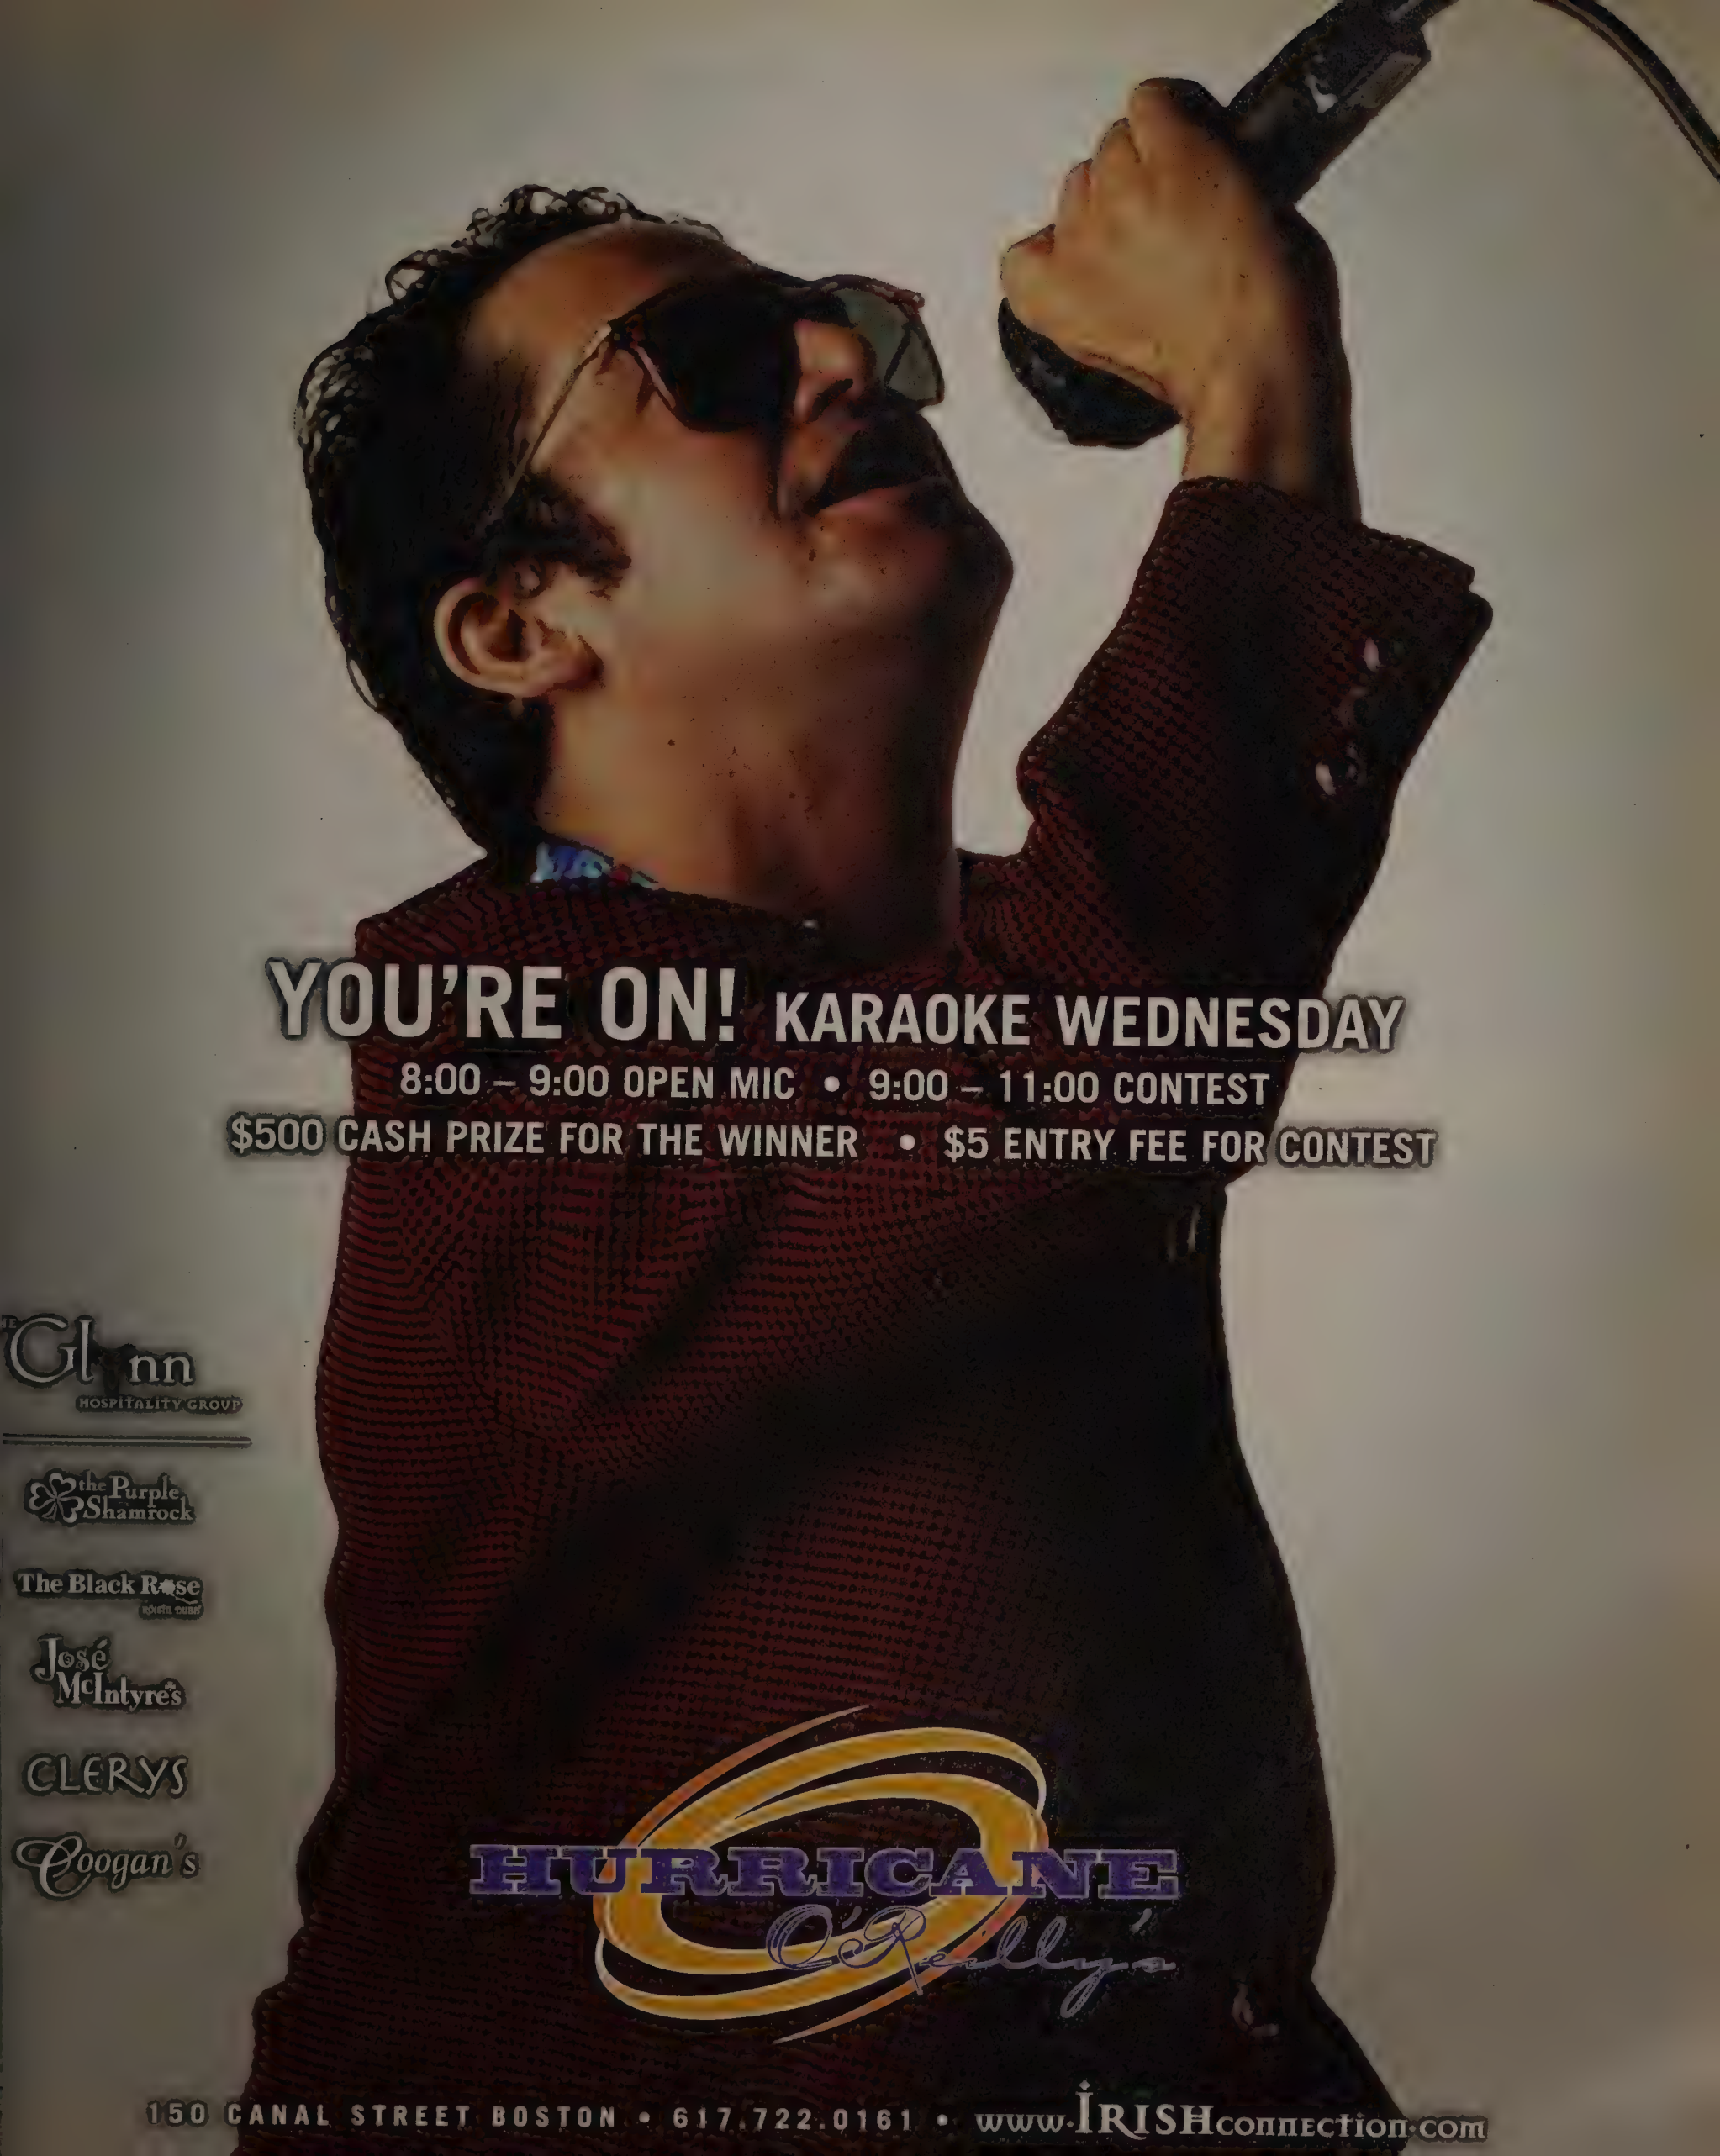
Comedy: Three Amigos



At this point, the three comedians who make up the Underdog Comedy Tour aren't exactly underdogs. Nor are they truly touring—it's hard to when the performers have full-time writing gigs for shows like Saturday Night Live and Late Night with Conan O'Brien. Leo Allen, Demetri Martin and Eugene Mirman are three New York comics who have arrived. Between them they boast awards from the Aspen, Montreal and Edinburgh comedy festivals, specials for Showtime and Comedy Central and numerous appearances on Conan, whose writing staff Martin recently joined. Misleading name aside, the so-called underdogs are straight-up funny, and they'll make a rare Boston appearance July 9 as part of the Regattabar's Summer Comedy Series. Instead of three separate acts, the audience sees all three comedians on stage together in a performance of stand-up and video. "We all joke around and chime into each other's acts," says Mirman, who got his start in the Boston comedy scene. "It's sort of conversational, very prepared but with some improvisation. There's no other show like it." Charles Hotel, 1 Bennett St., Cambridge (866-468-7619). 8 pm, $15.

Electric Video Move is at ArtBeat

FRI. & SAT./JULY 16 & 17

CityScope: A Different Drummer

Spending a summer weekend mindlessly lounging on a beach is great. But we'll admit that too much remote R&R can leave us feeling understimulated and culturally deprived. Somerville ArtBeat offers just the shot of offbeat urban culture we need. Hundreds of artists, musicians and dancers take to the streets of Davis Square for one of the most innovative arts fairs around. Sponsored by the Somerville Arts Council, this year's festival is themed Play and aims to bring the community together to make merry a creative and interactive environment. So, instead of sitting in hours of Friday-night Cape-bound traffic, you can play in a traffic-island poker game, sample the sounds of local indie-rock outfit Pee Wee Fist or take in a performance by video artists Electric Video Move. On Saturday, hear local writers read from their work, or show off your local-trivia skills at the Jimmy Tingle Theater's Somerville-themed game show, Wicked Smaht. Throughout the day, a variety of musicians ranging from bluegrass (Bag Boys) to violinists (FiddleBeat) to indie rock (Furvis) give live performances, and you can shop till you drop at the Bazaar Bizarre. Davis Square, Somerville (617-625-6600). www.somervilleartscouncil.org.

Shakespeare & Company presents Peter Shaffer's Lettice and Lovage

Mr. Moore Goes to Washington

Fahrenheit 9/11 puts the heat on Bush.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Michael Moore's Fahrenheit 9/11, the rabble-rouser's passionate deconstruction of Bush II, has no knockout revelations about this administration's controversial policies, so don't expect smoking guns. Its ultimate target is the war in Iraq, but the movie presents the war as just the latest in a pattern of self-serving, law-skirting behavior. Fahrenheit 9/11 is a very effective rundown of much-debated Bush policies and conflicts of interest that comes up with inspired ways of getting its points across.

Michael Moore talks with Lila Lipscomb, the mother of a soldier killed in the Iraq war.

You'd have to have been marooned, in denial or never exposed to The Daily Show not to have heard much of the dirt Moore throws at Bush and his neo-conservative oil-business pals. But Moore doesn't overlook something if it might be common knowledge—though there's less here on prisoner-of-war abuses in Iraq than I expected—because he's not just preaching to the converted. He directs Fahrenheit 9/11 as if he wants NASCAR dads and "red state" Wal-Mart shoppers to see it, and he wants them to see the whole story. So don't be surprised if Fahrenheit 9/11 covers topics and techniques you might have seen in places like The Daily Show or the documentaries Feed, Unprecedented: The 2000 Presidential Election and Control Room, or read in Moore's books.

Moore's first major target is the Florida presidential election process. He continues with George W. Bush and his inner circle's ties to the Saudi Arabian power elite (including the Bin Laden family), interviewing Craig Unger, author of House of Bush, House of Saud, and moves on to Dubya's military record and prepolitics business career (very much intertwined, we learn), the administration's fear-mongering following Sept. 11, and the propaganda campaign to justify invading Iraq.

But Moore filters these issues through his own narration and strings them together like different chapters in one big story (or perhaps different operations by the same plotters). He's onscreen less than he was in Roger & Me, The Big One and Bowling for Columbine, yet he argues his points better than in Columbine. Moore hits his targets because, despite his political aims, he makes you feel like you're watching a movie, not a political rant, and his sense of humor shines throughout Fahrenheit 9/11.

For instance, when Moore mentions that Dubya spent 42 percent of his first eight months in office on vacation, he cranks up the Go-Go's "Vacation." When he details the cushy relationship between the Bushes (especially George H.W. Bush) and Saudi oil interests, he gives us a montage of lovey-dovey meetings set to R.E.M.'s dippy "Shiny Happy People." When he questions the wisdom of the Bush administration letting Saudi nationals (including many Bin Laden relatives) fly out of the country following Sept. 11 without being questioned, he flashes old clips of Dragnet's Jack Webb doing police legwork as an example of meat-and-potatoes crime investigation. When he charges that our invasion of Afghanistan was, deep down, another oil-motivated war, he gives us hilariously doctored Bonanza credits with Dubya, Dick Cheney and Tony Blair's faces pasted over the Cartwrights'. And when, after hanging out with Marine recruiters sweet-talking working-class teens, he notes that only one member of Congress has a child serving in Iraq, he heads to the Capitol to hand out recruiting brochures to congressmen.

But Fahrenheit 9/11 is hardly all fun. Its amusing tangents often have grim undercurrents, as when Moore visits the only trooper assigned to guard the coast of Oregon, a sequence that ably points out that there should be more to homeland security than John Ashcroft's Patriot Act. The movie's most wrenching action involves Lila Lipscomb, a resident of Flint, Mich. (Moore's hometown). Many in her extended family have served in the military, and she supported the war in Iraq until her son was sent there and wrote to her of the conditions and dangers that weren't being reported back home (the movie also includes footage of American and Iraqi casualties and of GIs voicing criticism that you won't see on TV news). Lipscomb's anguished search for meaning after her son's death is Fahrenheit 9/11 at its most emotional.

As an elite that puts nothing ahead of its own power, the Bushes, Cheney, Rumsfeld, James Baker and their pals come off as the most heinous carpetbaggers—"chicken hawks" with no military service who send others into combat, war profiteers and manipulators who use the government to further their own business interests. Democrats come off as complicit in this system, for being pushovers cut from the same cloth. Whatever your perspective, Fahrenheit 9/11 is a challenge to demand more from the politicians we elect. BY PAUL SHERMAN

Around the World in 80 Days ★★

It's odd to see Phileas Fogg, the globetrotting hero of Jules Verne's book and the fun 1950s film made from it, practically reduced to comic relief in the remake. More emphasis is given to Jackie Chan as Passepartout, Fogg's valet, whose role has been inflated to include martial-arts battles with Chinese henchmen. This movie is so aggressively kid-friendly and cartoonish, including an overactive musical score to obnoxiously cue every twinge of potential feeling, that it's hard to get swept up by anything in the journey. But Steve Coogan (24 Hour Party People) as Fogg, Cecile de France as the mischievous French love interest and, of course, Chan, add enough personality to almost make up for the movie's cheesy sensibility. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Before Sunset ★★★

They'll always have Vienna. Nearly a decade after Ethan Hawke's and Julie Delpy's characters met there and had a one-day fling in Before Sunrise, Richard Linklater's sequel brings them together again, older and perhaps wiser, in Paris. He's now a married author who's written a novel based on the fling, while she's had rather poor luck with men. The spark is still there when they reunite, and the big question this time is whether the American abroad and the Frenchwoman will act on it. Until that fateful question must be answered, they engage in the same sort of intriguing conversation they had in the first film. But there's also a great deal of stylistic rehash, and the second time around is definitely not as memorable. (At Copley Place and Coolidge Corner.)

The Chronicles of Riddick ★½

Nothing like a bloated sequel to spoil a good thing. This sequel to 2000's spunky Pitch Black takes just about everything that was likeable about that futuristic action-adventure and conveniently forgets it. Pitch Black was compact in setting, Chronicles is literally all over the map. Pitch Black was an ensemble, Chronicles is a vehicle for Vin Diesel. And Pitch Black was modest and resourceful, while Chronicles is over-the-top and conspicuously thin on the original's cleverness. Diesel is essentially doing tired, 1980s Arnold Schwarzenegger schtick here, making tough-guy quips and slaying dozens at a time. While the quips are occasionally effective, the fight scenes are an unimaginative drag, and the notion of Riddick as an "outlaw hero" loses value when he triumphs over long odds every 10 minutes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Control Room ★★★

Startup.com co-director Jehane Noujaim's new documentary about Qatar-based Al-Jazeera, the Arab world's cable news channel, is fascinating not just for its behind-the-scenes glimpses into the network, but because it will make you question any media outlet's objectivity. Looking at differences between Al-Jazeera's coverage of the war in Iraq and the Western media's coverage, you'll gain respect for Al-Jazeera, because it showed the horrors of the violent war that Western networks would not. In addition, much of the analysis that its reporters tell Noujaim has turned out to be accurate. But, of course, Al-Jazeera is appealing to its audience, just as Western networks are, and the movie is a reminder of how all news coverage is shaped by cultural and political perspectives that judge what's important enough to report and what isn't. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

The Day After Tomorrow ★½

Wait a second. Isn't this big-budget, fake-danger spectacle the sort of movie that was no longer necessary and too plain crass to produce following Sept. 11? I guess not. This coldly efficient disaster movie about global warming whittling away at the polar ice caps, throwing the climate out of whack and launching a new ice age is full of cheesy subplots and clunky dialogue. The supremely stupid plot has scientist Dennis Quaid walking from Philly to Manhattan in a 15-foot-of-snow, sub-zero-temperature, worst-in-10,000-years storm to rescue teen son Jake Gyllenhaal. (Will someone please let him play an adult already?) (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

De-Lovely ★½

I don't know why this tin-eared Cole Porter biography seems so self-satisfied. It includes a dig at the heavily fabricated 1940s Porter biopic that miscast Cary Grant as the songwriter, and uncovers its predecessor, it deals with Porter's homosexuality. But this movie feels fabricated, compromised and just plain confused. (Is casting Kevin K any less contrived than Grant?) Although Porter's gay romances are covered, his lovers are rather anonymous, while we're supposed to think the "love of his life" is the chummy wife with whom he had a marriage of convenience (a shrill Ashley Judd). Meanwhile, director Irwin Winkler can't decide whether to go the postmodern Moulin Rouge route for the many musical numbers or be faithful to the song's time period—so we get half of them done faithfully, and the other half with the "stunt casting" of Robbie Williams, Alanis Morissette and Elvis Costello, among others, crooning. The top? Hardly. (At Boston Common and Harvard Square.)

Dodgeball: A True Underdog Story ★★★

Forget about "event movies." There's more fun to be had in this smart "dumb comedy" about the dodgeball showdown between Vince Vaughn's down-to-earth good guys and Ben Stiller's preening bad guys. As the old coot coaching the heroes says, "If you can dodge a wrench, you can dodge a ball," and there's a whole lotta dodging and upside-the-head thwacking to laugh at here. With Stiller and Vaughn switching hero-villain roles from Starsky & Hutch, Christine Taylor as the rifle-armed love interest, Rip Torn as the wizened coot, strong performances from the character actors playing Vaughn's misfit squad (including Stephen Root and Justin Long) and Gary Cole and Jason Bateman as the goofballs announcing the action for "ESPN 8 (The Ocho)". (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Door in the Floor ★★

Why do movies keep asking us to care about messed-up, upper-middle-class people? In this adaptation of a section of John Irving's A Widow for One Year, a teen (Jon Foster) takes a summer job as an assistant to a successful writer (Jeff Bridges) and gets embroiled in the writer's messy relationship with his separated wife (Kim Basinger). The wife is still numb from the deaths of the couple's two sons years before, the husband is sleeping around and the teen has the hots for the wife—I think you can do the math. But because the film doesn't give the perspective of any of these three characters, they remain sketchy and remote. Thinks do perk up in the last half hour, though, when Bridges starts acting like a higher-tax-bracket version of the Dude, his Big Lebowski character. But I'd have rather just watched that again. (At Kendall Square.)

Hijacking Catastrophe: 9/11, Fear & the Selling of American Empire ★★½

This production of Northampton's Media Education Foundation has as much to say about the Bush administration as Fahrenheit 9/11. But its dry, academic approach makes it far less effective. The meatiest stuff here covers two areas: neo-conservatives' plans for post–Cold War "global domination by force" that were devised during Bush I and in conservative think tanks, well before Dubya took office; and the post-9/11 propaganda to make Americans link Saddam Hussein and Osama Bin Laden. There are interesting voices interviewed—including former U.N. weapons inspector Scott Ritter, former Air Force officer Karen Kwiatkowski and always-shrewd cultural observer Mark Crispin Miller—but all the talking heads and "experts" make the movie feel academic and strident after a while. (July 13 at the Coolidge Corner.)

Rivers and Tides ★★★

Last year's imaginative documentary returns yet again for more shows at the Museum of Fine Arts. Its subject, Scottish artist Andy Goldsworthy, is a master of "in nature" sculptures that use found materials and often get swept away by the elements. Over the course of the movie, we see him construct several pieces. But director Thomas Riedelsheimer doesn't merely show us Goldsworthy's finished works; he swoops up on them from ground level or swirls upon them from above, letting us see them in ways we would not normally experience. (At the Museum of Fine Arts, July 10, 11, 17 and 18.)

Saved! ★★

You'll find no argument from me about this comedy's message, as it pokes fun at the repression and hypocrisy of religious fundamentalism. And the cast, playing students at American Eagle Christian High School, includes Jena Malone, Patrick Fugit and even Macauley Culkin and Mandy Moore doing some of their best work (love the end-credits duet of the Beach Boys' "God Only Knows" by Moore and co-producer Michael Stipe). But director and co-writer Brian Dannelly has made such a simplistic and smug movie that it's really only preaching to the converted, and you get the feeling he thinks it's much more outrageous than it really is. The film is only slightly less self-righteous than those it mocks. Check out the documentary Hell House, about the scare tactics of a Dallas Pentecostal haunted house, for the real thing. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Super Size Me ★★★

See Morgan. See Morgan eat only at McDonald's for 30 days. See Morgan's weight balloon, his cholesterol shoot up and his liver start to break down. Director Morgan Spurlock, sort of a lighter (and lighter-touch) Michael Moore, serves up his McBinge very amusingly, in order to expose the poison of American fast food. He plays the role of guinea pig with such a commitment and sense of humor that the rather depressing message of Super Size Me goes down easier. Whether Spurlock intended it or not, the larger picture of this country that his movie paints is a frightening one of total decadence, self-indulgence and slavishness to profit and instant gratification, at the expense of common sense and humanity. (At Copley Place, Coolidge Corner, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

The Terminal ★★

The story of an Eastern European forced to live in JFK Airport's international terminal might have been a breezy little comedy, but it becomes an overblown, overextended tale in Steven Spielberg's hands. Tom Hanks plays the poor fellow who lands in diplomatic limbo after a coup topples his country while he's en route to New York. The U.S. won't recognize his passport, and will neither let him enter the country nor return home. The hero is needlessly cute and unthreatening, and the story's reach for big moments is usually unsuccessful. Meanwhile, the movie seems oddly comfortable that its presentation of a microcosm of America is, essentially, a mall. (At Boston Common, Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

White Chicks ★½

"Been there, done that" is the major reaction to this Wayans brothers comedy that threads together several gimmicky comic premises (men dressing as women, wacky undercover cops, blacks sneaking into white society) into one trying movie. Shawn and Marlon Wayans have only a handful of amusing moments as FBI agents who impersonate two blonde, white heiresses at a socialites' gathering in the Hamptons. Most of the few laughs come from Terry Crews, who is fearlessly ridiculous as a smitten pro basketball player who thinks he's found his ultimate woman in one of the pretend-blondes: a white woman with a black woman's butt. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Deadshot

Guitar slinger Warren Haynes is grateful for his growing range of gigs.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Warren Haynes knows how to jam—when it comes to his schedule as well as his guitar playing.

He's now on the road as a member of the Dead, having been groomed in that band's repertoire with Phil Lesh & Friends, a side project of Dead bassist Lesh. Haynes also performs solo on that tour, which hits the Tweeter Center July 30-31, and he'll be back at the same venue Aug. 21 with the Allman Brothers Band. Then comes another CD and tour with his group Gov't Mule. And that doesn't count his cameos, among them a turn with the Dave Matthews Band in Central Park that's featured on a DMB DVD release.

Haynes tours with some of rock's biggest names this summer.

Haynes may work like a mule, but that's what happens when you're a popular figure on the jam-band scene and one of the 25 all-time greatest guitarists, as ranked by Rolling Stone magazine.

"The last few years have been the busiest years ever for me," says Haynes, 44, reached backstage at Denver's Red Rocks Amphitheater during a five-night Dead run. "But it was opportunities that I couldn't imagine turning down."

The attraction goes both ways. "He's going to beef up any ensemble he's playing with, and he knows enough that he doesn't overplay," says Dead singer-guitarist Bob Weir, one of four surviving Grateful Dead members (the others being Lesh and drummers Mickey Hart and Bill Kreutzmann) in the group.

The Grateful Dead had disbanded after the 1995 death of guitarist Jerry Garcia. The surviving members later reformed (without Kreutzmann) under the name the Other Ones and two years ago switched to the Dead moniker, shortly after the drummer returned. "It's a nod toward the material, the legacy," Weir says. "It's different enough now that we can't call it the Grateful Dead, but it's called something close so that people know what we're talking about. People want some familiarity."

"The band is pretty light on its feet," adds Weir. "It's done with all due respect to the tradition. But at the same time, we can't slavishly hold to the tradition. There has to be improvisation that's appropriate to the moment."

That's a given with Haynes and his respective guitar foils Jimmy Herring (in the Dead and Phil Lesh & Friends) and Derek Trucks (in the Allmans). "Jimmy and Derek and myself grew up improvising and being open-minded enough to walk onstage with no expectations and no parameters, and still having the confidence that it'll come off fine," Haynes says.

Ironically, Herring played with Trucks in the Allmans when Haynes left that band in 1997 after an eight-year turn to focus on Gov't Mule (he returned in 2000). "It's a very fertile time for the Allman Brothers now," Haynes says of a band that's also deftly balancing veterans and newcomers. "There's definitely a freshness, but everybody's attitude is in the right place, and there's a lot of new material."

As for serving in both the Dead and the Allmans, the two forerunners of today's jam-band scene, the North Carolina native says, "It was something you could never predict."

"Seeing anything from the inside is a whole different perspective," adds Haynes, who notes that each band has a distinct jamming style. "They're both a thing of beauty and something to behold, but very different from each other. The Dead has a more relaxed approach to jamming. The Allman Brothers is a little more intense on getting to the moment. The Dead is a little more about waiting for the moment to come around."

The husky-voiced Haynes is singing more in both groups as well, tackling Dead chestnuts such as "Terrapin Station" and "Dark Star" that were sung by Garcia. "He's got more range than Jerry used to have," Weir says.

While Haynes' fans are mostly familiar with his prowess on electric and slide guitar, they'll get the added treat of hearing him perform solo acoustic before the Dead. "It's getting easier, and it's actually invigorating," Haynes says of that format, heard on his new Live at Bonnaroo CD, which was recorded at that festival in 2003 and includes such bold covers as Radiohead's "Lucky" and U2's "One."

Next up this fall is a new Gov't Mule CD, the first with new bassist Andy Hess, who succeeds the late Allen Woody, Haynes' friend and comrade in the Allmans and the Mule.

"The Mule's where my heart's at, and the new record is the best one we've done yet," Haynes says of that power-blues unit, which first honored Woody by performing and recording with a roster of guest bassists including Deep Purple's Roger Glover, Primus' Les Claypool, Metallica's Jason Newsted, Phish's Mike Gordon and the Meters' George Porter Jr. "Now we're back to being a real band and forging our own path.

"I'm just blessed to be able to play music for a living, and to have these opportunities is amazing," Haynes says. "I'm thankful every day that I'm not digging a ditch." iB

Want Wainwright?

Artsy crooner hopes to appeal to "everyman."

Rufus Wainwright plays July 8 and 11.

Rufus Wainwright feels sanest in the sound booth.

"After so many years in the studio, you get quite adept at recording," he says, yawning, tired from the previous night's show in Milwaukee. "Not to be morbid, but now that it's the post–Sept. 11 era, time is much more valuable."

The openly gay singer-songwriter, son of legendary folkies Kate McGarrigle and Loudon Wainwright III, was weaned on classical piano and cabaret. Currently, he's sharing a triple bill with Ben Folds and Guster and enjoying himself despite some butterflies. "I'm always worried that there will be some diva action on co-headlining tours," he admits. "But Ben is such a sweetheart, a real mensch."

Wainwright is promoting Want One—the first half of a double-album project, released in September 2003—and premiering some new material from Want Two, which he hopes to release before Christmas. And while Want One is filled with passionate, multilayered, theatrical rock, Wainwright maintains that the second installment is darker and more introspective—a self-conscious reaction to the Iraq war and President Bush.

"I've learned that music does not heal personal problems," Wainwright says. "But it's so important to be vocal no matter where you stand. Gone are the days when you can be a wallflower."

Wainwright is no wallflower. Since releasing his eponymous debut album in 1998, he's been a critic's darling and a poster boy for gay empowerment. Devotees cram his message boards with praise, lapping up each new Wainwright release (including four new songs he released online through iTunes in late June).

If only he could find a way to expand that audience. "My fans are a little more, how do I say, underground, leftish, polysexual," he laughs. "A Guster or Ben fan is mainstream, the everyman. It's great to play to a different forum and reach people who haven't necessarily heard my music" On the current tour, Wainwright relies on favorites from his first two albums, and his well-known movie songs ("Hallelujah" from Shrek and "Instant Pleasures" from Big Daddy, to name two), to carry the crowd during his one-hour set. He begins with a new song, though—the dramatic, apocalyptic "Lamb of God" from Want Two— "to really get the show started."

And if Wainwright ever tires of the rock stage, he can head to the silver screen. Director Martin Scorsese asked Wainwright to play a bit part as a lounge singer in his upcoming November release, The Aviator, which stars Cate Blanchett and Leonardo DiCaprio.

"The day of filming was actually my 30th birthday last July," he says. "And my mom came to the set with a cake. But no one could find me; I was sleeping in my trailer."

What about the cake?

"I'm not positive, but I think Leo [DiCaprio] wolfed down the entire thing."

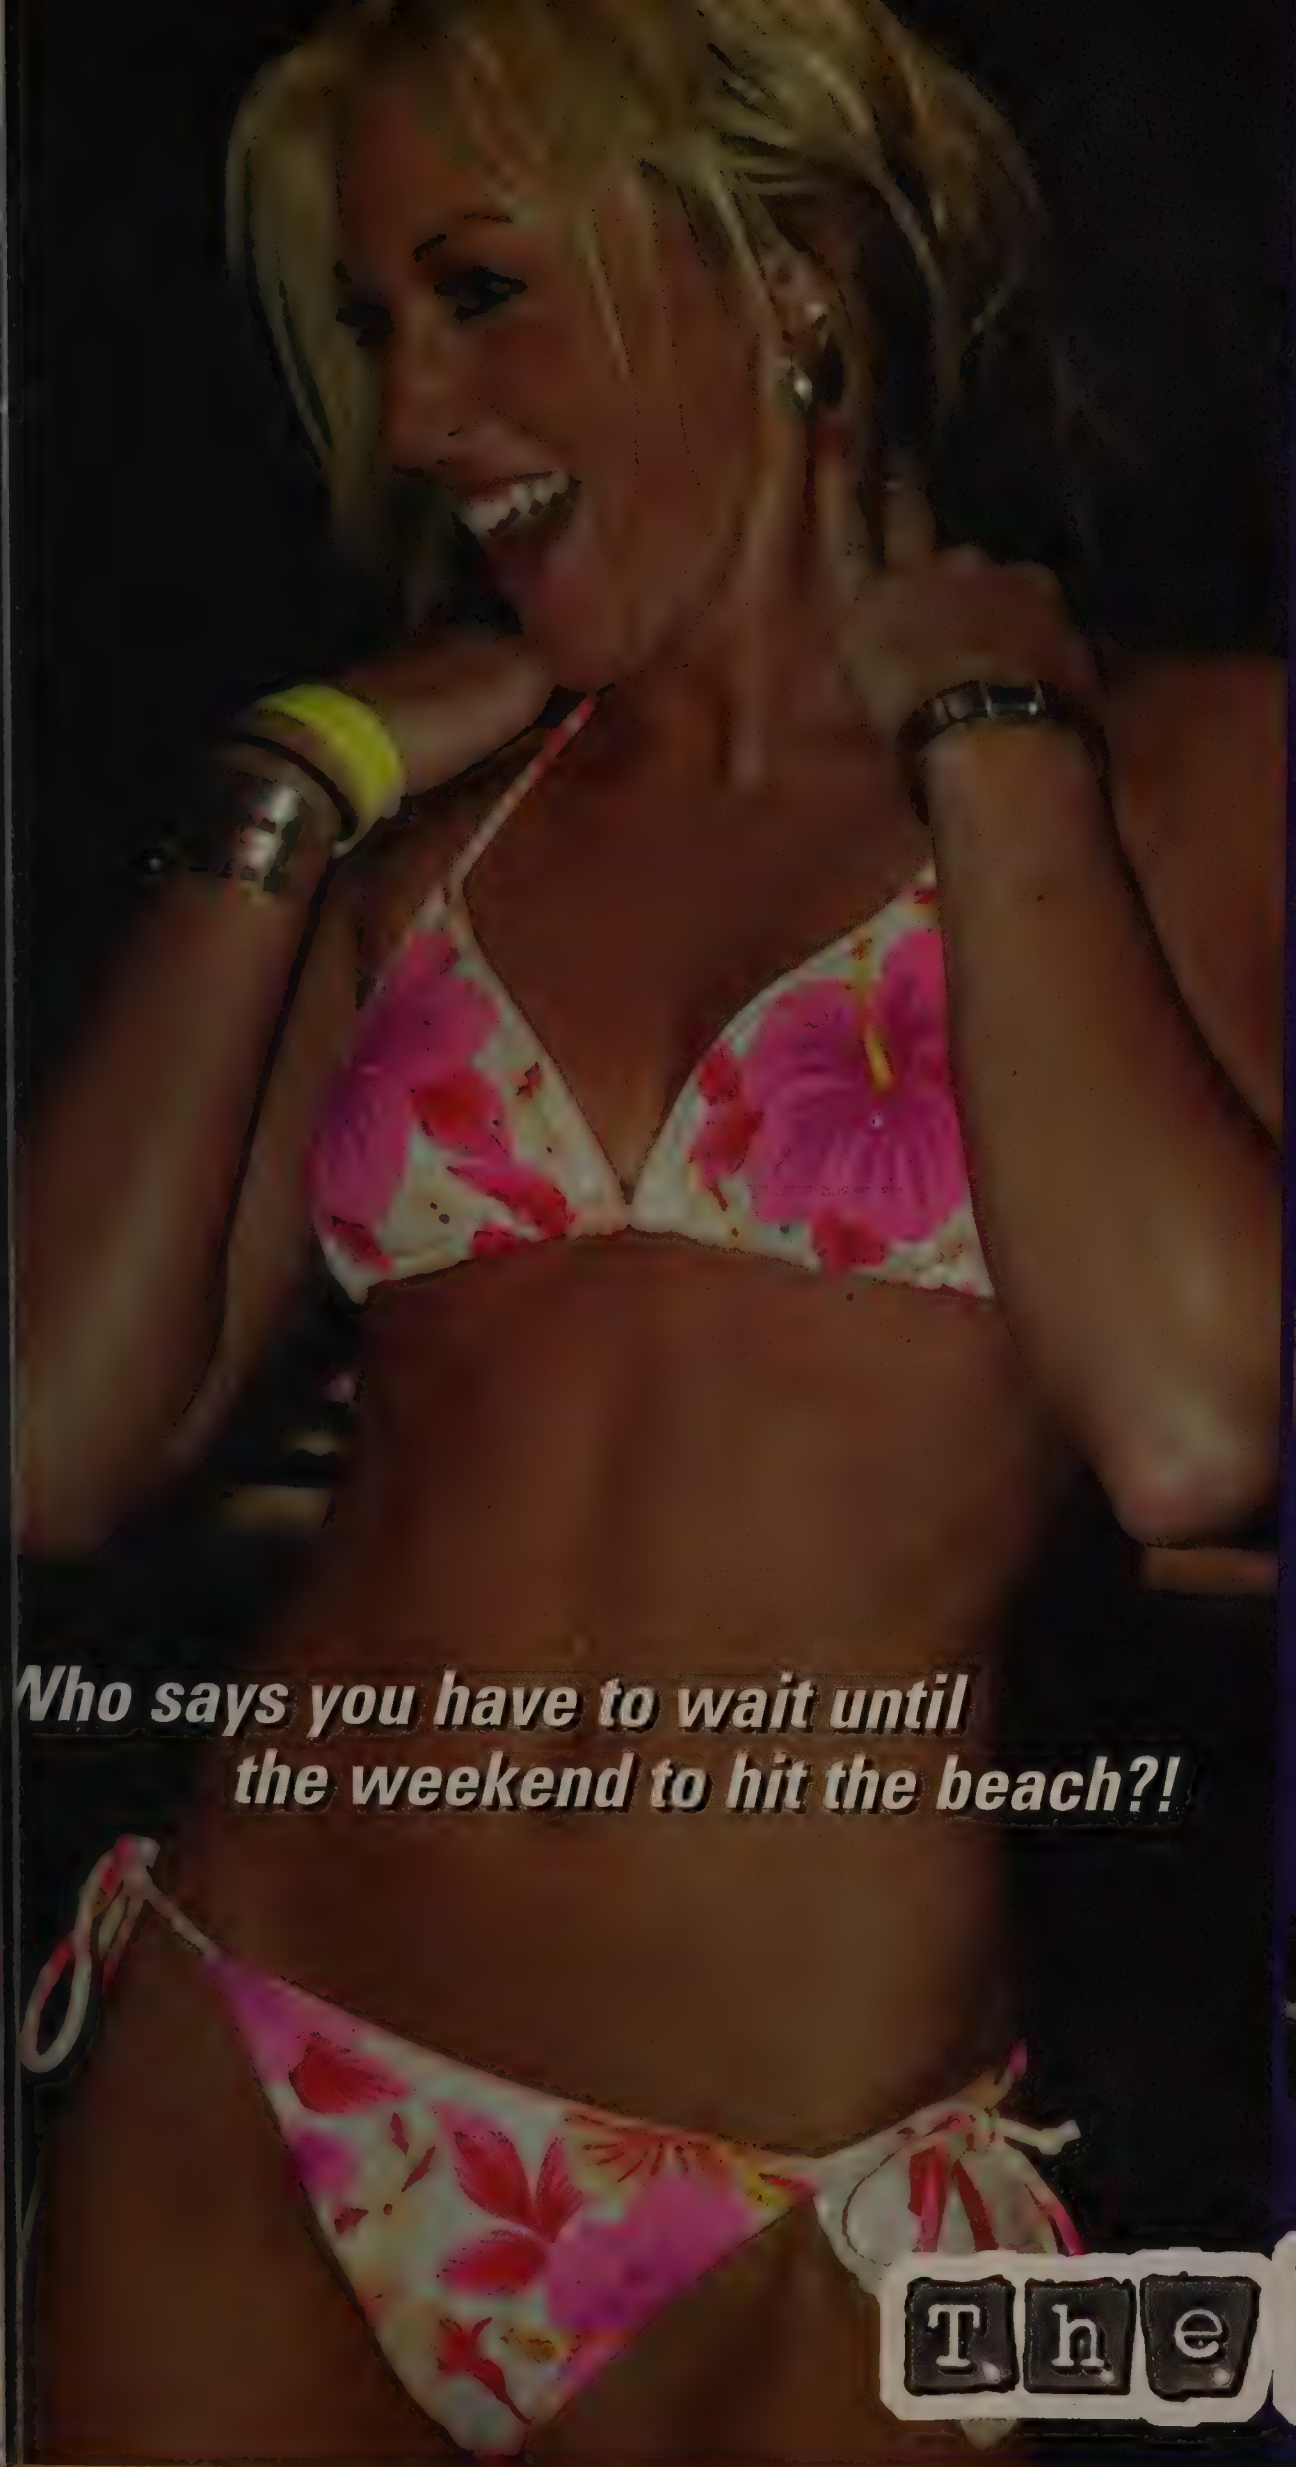
Bermudez Beats

DJ brings star power to Felt.

You may not recognize Joe Bermudez's name yet, but if you've been to a club or turned on the radio in the last few years, chances are you've heard his music.

The 27-year-old California native, now a Boston resident, started out as a board operator at a Maine radio station about eight years ago, but in recent years he's moved on from the likes of Portland and Bangor to working with stars like Pink and Britney and established himself as one of the country's top DJs. "All you can do is put together your stuff and throw it out there," says Bermudez, who spins every Wednesday night at Felt (10 pm, no cover), "and then you just have to hope people like it." Lately, finding an audience for his music hasn't been an issue.

Felt DJ Joe Bermudez



Since remixing three tracks on Pink's 2001 Missundaztood album, Bermudez's career has exploded with collaborations alongside some of music's top names. He had a hand in producing two current Billboard hits—Jessica Simpson's "Take My Breath Away" and Britney Spears' "Everytime"—and has mixed a song that will appear on Janet Jackson's forthcoming album, later this summer.

Those celebrity connections have translated into serious recognition for Bermudez's Summer Solstice series at Felt. "We've already had performers like Motorcycle, Mis-Teeq, and we're getting a bunch more to come in," he says. "It should be unbelievable."

Check it out while you can, because he's slated to be at Felt through September only, although that date isn't etched in stone. "If it keeps rockin'," Bermudez says, "there's no way we're gonna stop."

Felt, 533 Washington St., Boston (617-350-5555). Wednesdays, 10 pm. No cover.

Slichter Goes Semisolo

Semisonic drummer Jake Slichter's new book takes him from drum kit to rock lit.

Jake Slichter reads from So You Wanna Be A Rock & Roll Star at WordsWorth Books July 19.

Model/actress, actor/painter...in terms of the model's acting and the actor's painting, that slash almost never bodes well.

Semisonic drummer (and Harvard graduate) Jake Slichter is a rare exception. This musician-turned-author may be a hyphenate, but his new book, So You Wanna Be a Rock & Roll Star, is far from a self-indulgent celebrity vanity project. A chronicle of Slichter's experiences on the road and in the biz with bandmates Dan Wilson and John Munson, it's egoless, insightful and funny.

In his book's pages, the self-deprecating Slichter pulls off a balancing act that's rare in behind-the-music memoirs, discussing his band's commercial decline (following their number-one 1998 single, "Closing Time") without coming across as whiny or bitter toward his record label.

"As far as what happened to us in terms of business, it wasn't anything terribly different from what a lot of people experience in their jobs," says Slichter of Semisonic's label, MCA, which lost interest in promoting the band and eventually dropped them. (The group, though still together, is taking a break while Wilson records a solo album.) "It's just that in the context of being a rock musician, the ideas you have about what 'success' is going to be are grander."

In addition to its lack of blame-throwing, Rock & Roll Star is devoid of True Hollywood Story–style tales of band member clashes. "We're a very close-knit band," Slichter says of his relationship with Wilson and Munson. "We'd be on the road for months, and we'd get back home [Minneapolis], and the first thing I'd wanna do is go out and have a drink with those guys."

In fact, Slichter, who now lives in New York, says the biggest difference between touring behind an album and touring behind his book is not that he'll "be getting to bed earlier" or that his ears won't be subject to the "crushing" volume levels. Rather, it's the solo nature of the venture: "It's gonna be me in the spotlight, instead of me in the edge of the spotlight."

If Rock & Roll Star* is any indication, it's about time.

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

An Improper Thought

Griggs Street on the B Line: I was returning from a furniture hunt, waiting for the train to come, and standing next to me was the most striking man I had come across since I moved to Boston. We exchanged glances and boarded the train. After a few pleasantries we fell into conversation. I learned that you hailed from Texas, played in a band and worked in insurance. Intrigued when you tried to give me a copy of your band's CD, I gave you my number instead. Like a proper Southern gentleman, you waited three days to call me. Our attempts to meet again failed and it's been nearly a year. Sometimes I lie awake at night in the bed I bought that day, thinking about all the horrible men I've run across since, and I wonder what would have happened if our schedules hadn't conflicted. I'd love nothing more than to get a chance to know you better.

Sunny Walk in Allston

OK, it's June 10 in Allston. I'm walking around after getting a cup of coffee around 2 pm. I walk by Diskovery (used record and book shop) when you walk out. We headed down Brighton Ave., walking for the most part next to each other. We kept looking over at each other but didn't say a word. I stopped to take a turn down a street and you stopped as well. We looked at each other but said nothing. I wish I did say something. If you read this, drop me a line. I'd really like to actually say hello.

Cutie at Stadium June 12

You were wearing a striped shirt, a baseball cap and had dimples. I was wearing a black dress and have dark curly hair. We chatted and had a nice time. Would you like to leave your TiVo at home and meet me for a drink before I go to Ireland for vacation?

—pinktigerlily212@yahoo.com

Two Reds

The first time I saw you was at a New Year's Eve party in Geneseo, N.Y. Your short, yet feminine, red hair, runner's build and outgoing personality were the hit of the party for me. We passed each other on the dance floor, but it wasn't meant to be that night. I saw you more recently, in Boston, at the romantic Cuchi Cuchi, possibly your favorite restaurant? Your long, red hair fell on your shoulders and framed your beautiful face. You had on jeans, pointy black boots and a leather jacket. I was dining there as well, the skinny guy with slightly long, poofy red hair and a goatee wearing jeans, black shoes and a retro light-blue dress shirt. I looked directly into your striking green eyes more than once and saw a world of amazing beauty and love. You returned my glance, which shows there's something special between us. Somehow I know that we'll get a chance to finish the incredible thing that we started. E-mail me.

Tim at Sanctuary June 12

Hey, I just wanted to apologize for the rude comments made by my younger brother under his breath while we were talking pleasantries. I'm the gal that compared your looks to a young Richard Gere. Anyway, younger brother was in a fight with his girlfriend and decided to take it out on me.

June 22

A vision of loveliness on the Green Line: brown hair and eyes, a green teardrop of glass at your delicate collarbone and an oversized brown satchel that looked to topple you over. Someone dropped a ream of paper, and you lit up the train with your brilliant smile and wit as you glided over to help, a vision of grace and kindness. The casual warmth you showed to a complete stranger and the way you threw your hair over your shoulder as you bent to offer your help left me breathless, and all I could do was offer a lame smile and stare pathetically after you as you stepped off at Hynes. If there is a god, you will see this and e-mail me back, otherwise you'll haunt my dreams for years.

Hey Gypsy Boy

Where have you been? Did you get married? Are you hanging in Wellesley again? Poet girl has tried to get in touch. I miss the cats and the Black Mazda. Do you want me to try sky-writing? Get in touch. You know how.

—Poet Girl

You Freakin' Idiot!

Are you out of your mind? During the weekend of April 16, during the Red Sox vs. Yankees series, you stole my Red Sox tire cover. Are you crazy? Do you know how much bad karma that is going to bring you as well as the team you think you are honoring by taking it? Just know that every dropped ball, any hair in Johnny Damon's eyes, every Ramirez pop-up, any Ortiz strikeouts, you are personally responsible for. Until that tire cover makes its way back to its rightful owner, you must know that you have brought a dark cloud over an amazing team. Your friends must know that you took it, and they will hang their heads in shame knowing that it is you who has cursed their team. The only way to reverse this curse it to return my tire cover. Contact me here to prove that you are a true fan.

Desperately Seeking Watertown Suzy

Deadbeat Landlord

Tenants unite! My landlord is raising the rent with no justification. My apartment looks like it was hit by a sh*tstorm. Half of the apartment is held up by duct tape. Is the raising of our rent to include the removal of the duct tape? Who knows how many of my beers you have drank? The real kick to the nuts is when I come home and you are sleeping on my couch or watching cable in between pseudo house repairs. Hire a repairman, 'cause your work is suspect!

Brandon Hall Beauty

So many mornings I see you waiting for the C train. I stay on the subway longer than you do, and I've often wondered where you go when you exit at Hynes. No matter where the destination, there is no doubt that it is a better place when you arrive. Good weather or bad, warm or cold, happy or sad, any morning is better having seen you. A day does not go by that you don't look nice. This time of year it's often capri pants and a sleevele sweater. Or maybe a midlength skirt and silky top. Often you are standing there and gracefully shifting your weight back and forth between your feet. It is a peaceful and somewhat child-like motion that is pretty irresistible. And when you tip your head to one side and run your fingers through your shoulder-length blond hair, it's simply awesome. I'm not leaving an e-mail address and asking you to do a response. I'm not asking you to seek me out for a date. I just want you to smile today. For even though many people have probably told you the same things before, today I am telling you that I think you're beautiful and that you're special. Thank you for being you.

rockie horoscope

JULY 7 – 20, 2004

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

CANCER JUNE 21–JULY 22

The last of the dire predictions issued for Crabs and the country is scheduled for the 8th, when the sun and dues-paying Saturn meet. If another reason to feel anxious or depressed is the worst thing that results from their merger, consider your dues paid. If not exactly off the hook, July birthdays aren't due for a gut-wrenching challenge until the Libra sun squares Saturn two weeks before the election. On the upside, opportunity knocks when the sun and prosperity-minded Jupiter align this week. Happy birthday!

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

You're getting a preview now of what'll come to fruition after the sun enters Leo on the 22nd. With both Mercury and Mars traveling through your sign, you might have noticed that your perceptions are sharper, that you're communicating more effectively, more colorfully too. You should have more energy and even your libido may be on the rise. However, you're also inclined to fantasize about an elusive partnership and willingly buy into whatever pretty picture a somewhat significant other is painting. Stop in the name of love!

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Let's hope your social life reflects the abundance of planetary activity in your Cancerian house of friends, hopes and wishes. This is also the area where socio-political issues resonate and alliances are forged. A major one can emerge when the family-oriented Cancer sun meets Saturn, the general, on the 8th. And while you might not want to assume more responsibilities, this conjunction could affect the abundance you picture yourself enjoying in the future. What follows may not qualify as a challenge, more like a sidebar.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

The family's good name, your performance at work, even your employer's reputation can be the issues you'll be dealing with while so much planetary power is concentrated at the top of your solar chart, in your midheaven. A lot of people, some of them government officials, could be paying attention, both to the situations that have frustrated you as well as to those that have made you more respectable. If you were running for parent of the year, you'd be a shoo-in. Imagine that, and without having to buy anyone's vote!

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Get out of town; the farther you can go, the better off you'll be. And if you can get away for "business purposes," that's even better. While your Mars co-ruler travels through Leo, you'll have more opportunities to show off, no matter what your talent may be. Although the more creative Scorpios will prefer to hide their light under a bushel basket, there are some who'll relish being in the spotlight. Meanwhile, should your guru beckon, heed the call. Now is also a good time to get serious about your studies and honor your mentor.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

A relationship that seemed to be going nowhere could be upgraded for a mutually satisfactory resolution. Now that accommodating Venus in your Gemini house of allies and antagonists is inching forward, you might think you're simply retracing steps you took when taxes were due. Uh-uh. There's a chance there's another destination that won't be revealed until Venus reaches out to your ever-hopeful Jupiter ruler for the third and final time around the 20th. Until then, pay the bills and maintain the status quo.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

The follow-up to an important conversation or the transference of crucial information may occur when the sun meets your problem-solving Saturn ruler on the 8th. This is their second conjunction in your Cancer marriage house, so consider what happens now a blueprint for building a stronger relationship over the next 12 months. Burdensome, difficult, frustrating, enervating, anxious, bored—these are some of the feelings you may harbor about the partnership. But Saturn will eventually move on and the weight will be lifted.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

This would be a fine time to check into alternative, effective health practices. While the nurturing Cancer sun meets paternal Saturn, your ancient ruling planet, a bell inside your head may ring loud and clear. It could be a warning signal or an invitation to celebrate. Either way, make sure that the small stuff is being attended to, that all contingencies are covered. Same thing applies to your gig. No matter how much faith you may have in the system that's in place, now is not the time to let things slide.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Fish who crave a bit of stability could get more than they bargained for while the supportive Cancer sun joins forces with tradition-minded Saturn. This merger is about parenting with a big, fat "P." What happens this week can set the tone for relations with children, older students and younger lovers for the next 12 months. Who thought that teaching would be the answer to "How I spent my summer vacation"? So whether your area of expertise is academic, artistic or athletic, prepare to spend quality time pursuing consistency and success.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Right now, Rams can benefit or, depending on the latest phone call, feel overwhelmed by parental obligations and family traditions. Bear with those burdens and enjoy the rewards because this is a relatively rare occurrence. It's only during the Independence Day and Christmas holidays that you're caught in the crunch between the maternal concerns of Cancer and those of proprietary, paternal Capricorn. After you satisfy the folks, you can go back to hanging with your creative Leo and adventurous Sagittarius playmates.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Relax. Progress may seem slow because your Venus ruler is moving slowly. So what! Summer is here and you deserve a break from your routine. Actually, now would be a good time to take a few short trips, visit relatives and former classmates, attend a festival or pretend you're back in school. Any type of recreation could be the revitalizing tonic that'll get you in shape, physically and mentally, for the huge burst of creativity coming in the fall. Meanwhile, try to avoid the fanatic in the family and accidents in the kitchen.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Dressing up and stepping out? While your Mercury ruler travels through theatrical Leo (until the 25th), you can come up with new ways to display your creativity, especially a dramatic way with words. You could also learn a valuable lesson from the sun's merger with constructive Saturn in your money house: how to put some other assets to work and how to do more with less. However, at the same time, Venus in your sign, by aligning with expansive, enthusiastic Jupiter, urges you to spend more on yourself and your surroundings. Another typically Gemini contradiction!

UNLIKE THE REST OF YOUR FRIENDS, WE WANT TO SEE THE PHOTOS FROM YOUR NEXT TRIP

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Brian Conaghan conquered the Grand Canyon in this kayak. Then Shaq showed up and demanded his loafer back.

Simon Schwartz conquered the Matterhorn in Switzerland. "Matterhorn" is Swiss for "horn that is made out of matter."

Rhonda Martin conquered the Ngozumpa Glacier near the Mount Everest base camp in Nepal. Did you know that if Mount Everest were a skyscraper, it would be the tallest building in the world?

Sgt. Sharon Gay conquered Iraq, in Iraq. This photo was taken just before Xzibit showed up and pimped her ride with a fly "up armor" package and underbody neon.

Darcy Wills, Candace Chapman, Danielle Schlesier, Eileen Schlesier and Holly Robbins conquered the Preakness at Pimlico Racetrack in Baltimore. Did you know that racehorses run so fast because they're afraid of ladies' hats? It's true.

Washington governor Gary Locke conquered the IMPROPER. Hey, can we talk about Freddy Garcia?

A GRANDE DAME GETS HER DUE...

It's about time. One of Boston's greatest living treasures, Cathryn Keith, was honored at a reception hosted by the Boston Harbor Hotel, where she received the Dana Bisbee Award (named for the Herald columnist and dean of the Boston social scene) to acknowledge her four decades of volunteerism with Boston Ballet, New England Medical Center and numerous other institutions.

Seen schmoozing, sipping champagne and scrawling brief love letters to Keith on a large caricature of her drawn for the occasion were many of the city's top movers and shakers, among them Brahmin do-gooder Sylvia Pope; Boston Ballet jefe Mikko Nissinen; hotelier Robin Brown and his luscious wife, Marcia; Chestnut Hill powerhouse Kathy Taylor; expectant mother Karyn Lamb and her New York socialite sister, Nathalie Kaplan; force of nature Spring Sirkin; design avatar Denise Korn; notorious gadfly Martin Slobodkin; the stunning Dena Hamilburg; blonde cutie Jill Goldweitz; dowager empress Smoki Bacon and her royal consort, Dick Concannon; and so on and so forth down the list of who's got serious juice in this town.

Inevitably, several conversations involved Keith's trademark coiffure, an elegant, elaborate-looking twist that engulfs a black velvet headband and never has a single strand out of place.

"I don't know how she has time to volunteer anywhere," said one guest. "It must take all day to look that perfect."

OPEN MOUTH, INSERT FOOD...

In a propitious marriage of philanthropy and self-indulgence, the multitaskers who attended the Celebrity Chef Soiree were able to make the world a better place by grazing on tasty morsels prepared by some of the city's top chefs.

Held in the swanky Charlestown offices of Vitale, Caturano & Co. (an accounting firm, no less!), the event benefited the numerous non-profits supported by the firm's charitable foundation. Guests could not only eat and drink to their hearts' content, but they could buy a cookbook and get it signed by the celebrity chefs on hand, who included Barbara Lynch of No. 9 Park and B&G Oysters; Jody Adams of Rialto; Dante deMagistris of Blu; Jeremy Sewell of Great Bay; Marc Orfaly of Pigalle; Ken Oringer of Clio; Tony Susi of Sage; and Anthony Caturano of Prezza (whom we're guessing had more than a little to do with organizing the whole thing, since his father is a partner in the accounting firm).

Guests included the eccentrically elegant Cecile Lemley (who just had the Ladies Room at the new Provincetown Theater named in her honor) with her husband, Frasier; parking mogul Andrew Tuchler and his gorgeous blonde wife, Christine; interior design duo Suzanne Logan and Gigi Gowdy with clients Joe and Robin Falzone; Boys & Girls Clubs honcha Linda Whitlock; antiques dealer Irina Weatherly; mutual fund executive Janice Morris-Hatch and her husband, Michael Hatch; fashion designer and tireless party-goer Paula Jaq'lyn; talented shutterbug Christina Caturano; promotions babe Meghan McSheffrey; debonair hotelier Tim Kirwan of the Hotel Commonwealth, and one young woman who was there to hunt for a husband and said, "I did see one cute guy who's not dressed great, so it's safe to assume that he either doesn't have a girlfriend or needs a new one."

LISTEN, MY CHILDREN, AND YOU SHALL HEAR...

If Congreve was right that "music has charms to soothe a savage breast," imagine what it can do for a bunch of rambunctious, unruly 8-year-olds?

That seems to be the idea behind Boston Landmarks Orchestra, which presents a season of free classical music concerts geared toward a younger audience and performed in architecturally or historically significant places like the Boston Common and the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Headed by conductor Charles Ansbacher, the group hosted a piss-elegant fund-raiser at the Ritz that included a silent auction, dinner and the premiere performance of The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere, an original work commissioned from composer Julian Wachner.

Unfortunately, Ansbacher's wife—Texas oil heiress, Harvard dignitary and former U.S. ambassador Swanee Hunt—was stuck in Washington, D.C., that evening, but blessedly present were co-chairs Suzanne Bloomberg and Stephanie Warburg and their respective husbands, Tweeter director Jeffrey and banking family scion Jonathan; former senatorial spouse Joan Kennedy; arts patron Linda Cabot Black; patrician author Muffie Cabot; Cambridge grande dame Beatrice Roy; attorney-about-town Stuart Sojcher and his stunning spouse, Diane Gilbert; the impeccably dressed and improbably tall Bill Nigreen; social stalwarts Sally Fay and Bill Cottingham; Back Bay philanthropists Bert and Rosalie Cohen; uber-publicist Harron Ellenson; and one woman in a pair of yellow pumps who said, "I have a broken ankle, but I'll be damned if I wasn't going to wear shoes that match my dress."

Classical radio personality Ray Brown of WCRB-FM 102.5 served as narrator, reading the classic poem by Longfellow while the musicians played and the crowd of normally reserved adults carried on like a group of rowdy kids, imitating the noise of a horse's galloping hooves.

The auction, meanwhile, netted some serious dough for the orchestra while offering some incredible bargains to the winning bidders, like the lucky guy who got a five-day stay at the magnificent Hunt-Ansbacher ranch in Colorado.

"What a deal," said another guest. "The place sleeps eight, and for what he paid, he couldn't put that many people up in a roach motel." IB

Nice equipment and a great personality.

When we started four years ago, we were a little airline in a really big country. Thanks to you, we're now the most recommended airline in America* with over 24 million customers flown to date. People no longer ask, "Does the world really need another airline?" Now they're asking, "Why can't other airlines be more like JetBlue?" Is it so hard to offer free DIRECTV® service, new planes and low fares? Is it so hard to treat people right? No, it's not. We're so glad so many of you like the experience we're delivering that we just want you to know, we like you, too. But then again, we always have.

We like you, too.

CREAM OF THE CROP

Want to know what's the best Irish bar in the city? The most underrated restaurant? Or where you can get the best haircut? In this issue we're proud to present the 313 winners of our 2004 Boston's Best awards—our picks for the best this city has to offer in food, drink, nightlife, arts, fashion and more. These are the places and people that we think stand out from the crowd, that do at least one thing like no one else does, and help give our city character.

Months of research went into our selections. We recruited a team of accomplished Bostonians to serve as judges, and we followed up their recommendations with loads of undercover field trips to local establishments. The result is our largest Best issue ever—in fact, the biggest issue we've ever published.

This year's Boston's Best issue is especially timely, since it coincides with the arrival of the DNC's 35,000 visitors, who might like to know where to find the Best Place for a Civilized Nightcap (page 56)—or perhaps the Best Place to Relive Spring Break (page 60)—after a hard day of politicking. But whether you're in town for a week, a fresh transplant from afar, or a lifelong Bostonian, we hope you'll find this issue an entertaining read and a valuable tool to help you make the most of life in our city.

PUMPED UP

"Don't Get Me Strong" (Ezra, July 7) was a great story. Show me a man who doesn't dream of looking like Lou Ferrigno and I'll show you sour grapes. Over the course of 25 years of slinging barbells, I have managed to stay slim and sinewy, but have never achieved a Herculean image requiring that I turn sideways to fit through doors. But have you ever read statistics on how few men are capable of putting on massive muscle without drugs? It's around 10 percent. That's my reliable back-pocket excuse, anyway.

—DAN SANFORD
Cambridge

MISTAKE BY THE LAKE

Author Mokriski is mistaken (Dining, July 7). St. Jean's Church was a French-language parish—not Italian—to "The Lake" community. St. Jean translates to St. John in English. To answer his question of what happened to the body of water for which the community is named, the original lake was filled many years ago. The Newton Public Library has a very good history of the villages of Newton.

—C.D. MURRAY
Watertown

DIY FYI

The pillows you made are charming ("D.I.Y.," June 23), but you don't have to stuff them. Buy a 12-inch pillow form or an 8-inch one and slip it in. For the bolster or neck pillow, you can buy preformed ones as well.

—BARBARA PAPISH
Beverly

CORRECTION

While the historic Warren Tavern doesn't have water views ("Let's Do Brunch... Again," June 9), it was reportedly visited by George Washington and Paul Revere.

RUSTIC REDUX

It's not always bad things that come in threes: we've got three-day weekends, the LOTR trilogy, Neapolitan ice cream...and pretty soon, the Boston area will have three Rustic Kitchens. The second location of the Mediterra- nean-Italian bistro owned by Jim Cafarelli and headed up by chef Bill Bradley (formerly of Bricco and Carmen in the North End) opened in Cambridge's Porter Square in July (a third location, in Hingham, is set to open this fall).

The new Rustic Kitchen

Fashioned after the original in Faneuil Hall, the Porter Kitchen is dimly lit, spacious-yet-cozy and bustling. There are plenty of favorites from the Faneuil Hall location on the menu—appetizers like cod fritter and hearty main courses including lavender and honey–basted duck breast with rhubarb. The Cambridge location also has the same fresh, crusty breads (served with an addictively tasty white-bean dipping sauce), homemade pastas, wood-oven-roasted thin-crust pizzas and lots of wines by the glass.

Bradley has made some changes with the new Cambridge menu, however. He's introduced his version of an Italian raw bar, called the Oysteria (with selections like tuna with saba, mint and chilies) and he's added more cicchetti (tapas) offerings, like baked polenta with gorgonzola.

Dessert specialties include homemade gelato and sorbet (try the Rustic ice cream Sunday—hazelnut semifreddo, a chocolate gelato pastry shell, with warm caramel sauce and cocoa hazelnuts topped with whipped cream). A close second is the peach crème brûlée—some of the very best we've tasted. Open daily for lunch and dinner. 1815 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-354-7766), www.rustickitchen.biz. —E.H.

PRIMP YOUR PROFILE

You can hype up your personals profile till there's no tomorrow, but when it comes to online dating, your picture really is worth a thousand words. AttractOne.com and Boston's Linear Aveda Lifestyle Salon & Spa are teaming up to give singles a leg up on the competition. The new Web cam–based dating site (users can see and talk to potential matches via live Internet chat) is giving 100 of Aveda's female customers a free Web cam and a six-month AttractOne membership. Here's the idea: Instead of flipping through a fashion mag, single gals use their time spent under Aveda's hair dryer to log on to AttractOne.com and set up their profile (laptops are supplied at the salon). Once the info is uploaded, the women make their chatting debut looking perfectly primped. If all goes well, the lovely lady walks out of the salon with a dashing fella lined up—love, marriage and happily-ever-after follow. If not, at the very least, she walks out with a free Web cam. 669 Boylston St., Boston (617-267-3080), www.attractone.com. —Jessica Iredale

ROB CORDDRY

Fans know Rob Corddry as the intense correspondent on Comedy Central's impossibly smart, albeit "fake," news program, The Daily Show with Jon Stewart. What many don't know is that Corddry hails from Weymouth. And before he started providing his deadpan reporting of hardhitting stories like gay tourism and nursery crimes, the actor/comedian cut his show-biz teeth on Upright Citizens Brigade and Late Night with Conan O'Brien, scored a part in Old School, and fancied himself "a pretty important actor." When the Democratic National Convention rolls into town, so will Corddry and his ballbusting compatriots, to do their dubious reporting on Kerry, Edwards and the like. Here, he talks about doing the DNC, Daily Show–style.

IB: Where will The Daily Show stay during the DNC? Is a whole floor of the Four Seasons booked?

RC: Yeah right. We're staying at BU in the dorms. I mean the classy dorms. The ones that have the nicer, newer bathrooms, and, um, you know, some suites. We're staying in the party dorms.

IB: Are you insanely jealous of Stephen Colbert's Mr. Goodwrench bucks?

RC: Well, I don't mean to drop names, but I did a commercial with Carrot Top, and, while that was only one little spot, I was able to make about $1,200 off it. Actually, I'm really jealous of Stephen Colbert's bobble-head doll. It stares at you no matter where you go in the room.

IB: How do you maintain your impartiality as a reporter?

RC: I don't have to because I take no responsibility for any of this shit.

IB: What do you think will be the most compelling story of the DNC?

RC: John Edwards: Should he campaign topless?

IB: Are you worried that unprecedented security will prevent you from doing your job properly? For example, they're supposedly allowing no packages larger than a loaf of bread on the T.

RC: That's OK, because that's all I'm carrying around Boston: my signature loaf of bread. [Security] shouldn't be a problem, because when I'm not doing something for the show I'm probably going to be drunk.

IB: What will you do for kicks while you're in Boston?

RC: I'm sure there will be a family dinner or two. Play with my nephews. Nap. Check out the Boston Tea Party.

IB: Do you plan on crashing any of the delegation's parties?

RC: By crashing do you mean trying to sneak my loaf of bread in? I just don't want to do anything that means getting stuck in traffic.

IB: Who would win in a poetry slam John Kerry or George Bush?

RC: Bush. Hands down. It'd be a very Beat, disjointed, sort of experimental type. I think we've taken a lot of what George Bush says for malapropisms, but his misspeakings are actually poetry. If Kerry were to write a poem it'd be like Ulysses. No paragraphs. No room for breathing. We'd all pass out.

IB: What word or phrase will Kerry use most often in his nomination acceptance speech?

RC: Some combination of "I" "and" and "a."

IB: Who has better hair—John Kerry or Johnny Damon?

RC: Damon. Are you kidding me? My wife has the biggest crush on Johnny Damon, and I only support that.

IB: What are the chances of John Kerry and Teresa Heinz Kerry French-kissing on stage?

RC: I guess there's more of a chance of John Kerry and John Edwards French kissing. Those guys are all over each other, always patting each other and finishing each other's sentences. They're like the overly affectionate couple. I'm just embarrassed for them. I mean, we get it, you guys are best friends.

IB: Any last words?

RC: Go Red Sox.

WHAT'S OLD IS NEW

Instant Replay... When Allston institution the Sports Depot chucked its game-time theme and became Captain Fishbones last year, the result was more The Old Man and the Sea than thriving seafood eatery. General manager Sheldon Cohen admits the decision was a bad one. "We realized the error of our ways and we're prepared to serve crow as a special for the next six months and eat it." The team returned to its original game plan a few weeks ago and resurrected the Sports Depot. They polished up the interior, replaced the nautical decor with hi-def and plasma TVs—60 in total—and the new menu has more pub grub and less seafood. Even the scoreboard mural on the outside wall is back. 353 Cambridge St., Allston (617-783-2300).

Boston Globetrotters... Businessmen Joe Dunne and Declan Mehigan already own a stable of great watering holes around the city (Lir, McGann's Pub and Coyote Ugly). In late June they opened up their latest venture, called Globe, at 565 Boylston St., the former home of White Star Tavern. Many of White Star's menu items remain, but a redone patio, a new music system and three brand spanking new 47-inch plasmas look like the ingredients for a new summer hot spot. 565 Boylston St., Boston (617-778-6993).

Lobstah Dogs... Jasper White, chef and owner of the aptly named Summer Shack in Cambridge and the Back Bay, hit a home run 25 years ago when he unleashed his "lobster sausage" at the Bostonian Hotel. In early July, White resurrected the dish at the Summer Shack, but this time with a little deep-fried twist. Lobster corn dogs—sausage made with lobster, shrimp and seasoning and then deep-fried with corn dog batter—are now available. They cost $10 and come with a plate of fries and mustard sauce for dog-dipping. 149 Alewife Brook Pkwy., Cambridge (617-520-9500); 10 Scotia St. / 50 Dalton St., Boston (617-867-9955).

Cambridge Curry... Fresh and authentic are words to cook by at Tamarind Bay, Harvard Square's new Indian eatery. Instead of the dictionary-sized menus typical of its nearby rivals, co-owner Vikas Kapoor decided to pare down the offerings to ensure that everything is made-to-order. Food is prepared without artificial colors or flavors, and even though the number of dishes is limited, the variety isn't. Tamarind Bay features some rarely seen Indian fare, like faldhari kofta, raw banana dumplings in onion sauce, and macchi anarkali, mahi mahi flavored with carom seed and silky yellow gravy. The decor matches the food—simple but authentic, with serving dishes imported from India and a replica of a 14th-century buddha standing guard at the entranceway. 75 Winthrop St., Cambridge (617-491-4552).

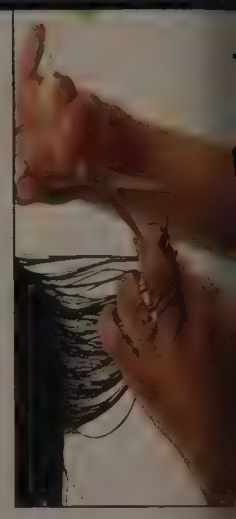
DAINTY DESIGNS



It seems jewelry designers have grown tired of the big bling and chunky baubles that have dominated the past few seasons. The loud, in-your-face look (think Dior's large lucite cuffs and J. Lo's infamous pink diamond ring) is taking a backseat to dainty, demure pieces. Classic pearls are hotter than ever, and gems on delicate gold strands are on their way in. Celebs like Cameron Diaz and Drew Barrymore have been spotted in one of my favorite new looks: funky, fresh versions of 1920s-era stacked necklaces with three strands—choker-length, mid-length and decolletage-skimming. Whether it's three strands that clasp together in the back or individual pieces worn together, this style is invading stores everywhere and it's one I'm excited to create on your own. —Samantha House

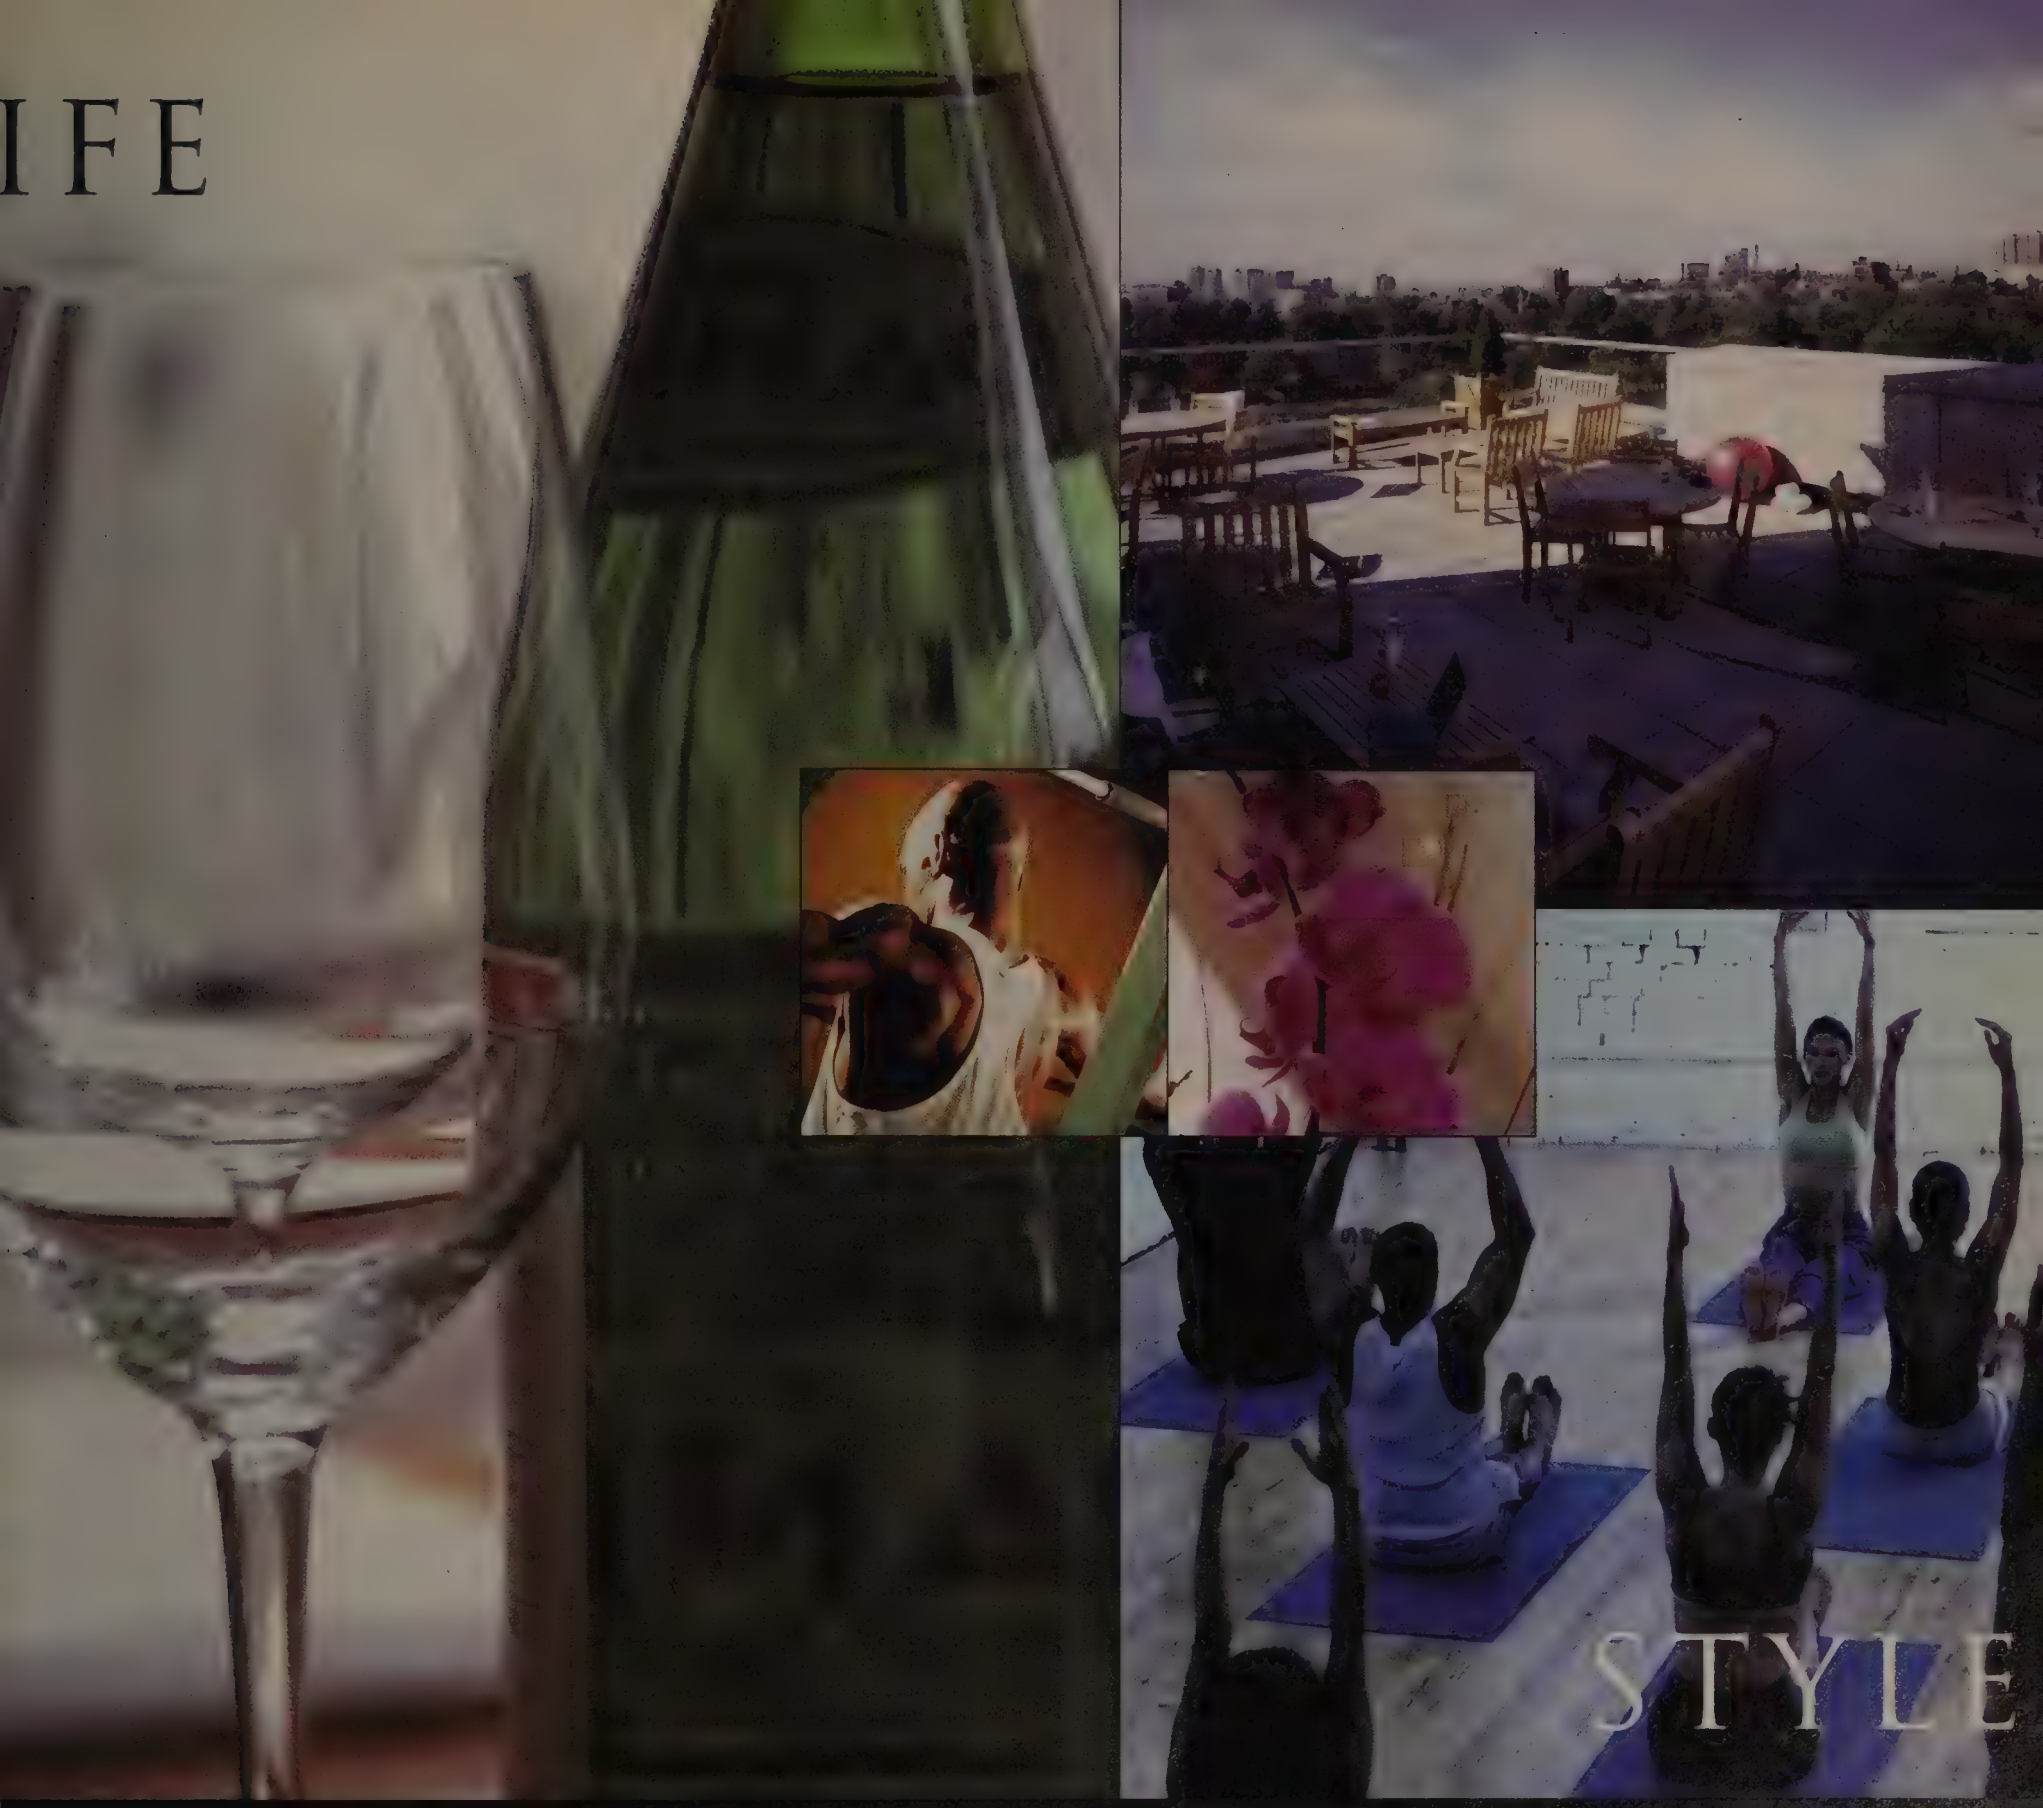
IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTIO

Oh, Give Me a Home... Boston banker Corey Gorman got a surprise recently when Country Music Television called and told him he'd won the CMT Ultimate Home 2 in Nashville, the dream house inspired by celebrities like NASCAR driver Jimmie Johnson and Baywatch's Gena Lee Nolin. Gorman thought it was a scam, since he wasn't sure he'd even entered the contest. "I vaguely recollect doing it," he told CMT. After two days of convincing, Gorman decided the offer was for real and began celebrating. "I come from a small apartment in Boston," he told his Southern-fried benefactors. "I think it's 500 square feet...And this one's 5,000 square feet." As for the obvious question, Gorman hasn't yet decided whether he'll keep the house, since he isn't keen on moving to Nashville. But he's not ruling out having a vacation pad in Tennessee. After all, maybe Gena Lee will stop by now and then to visit her handiwork.

Fashion Fix... Women who mourned the loss of E6 Apothecary's cosmetic frippery when it closed last spring can fill their closets with goodies from the store's fashionable successor, Obsessions. The boutique, which stepped into E6's former Newbury Street spot in May, stocks dresses, jeans and tops by Trina Turk, Tocca, Easel and Custo, and owner Holly Halloran plans to introduce new lines every season. Lingerie, jewelry and purses are among the trendy trappings, and prices don't have to break the bank—you can buy a $37 T-shirt or an $800 dress. 167 Newbury St., Boston (617-437-0007).

Great Plates... Dr. Seuss' most well-known character may soon be emblazoned on a special set of Cat in the Hat Mass. license plates. By early July, there were only 260 preorders (the state requires 1,500 orders to begin a production run), but the push was on, and we're sure the cat will eventually join the Cape and the Islands, the right whale and all the rest. Here are a few of our suggestions for special-edition tags, so if you like one, round up 1,499 friends and let's get this started:



* Yield to No One
* We're Here. We're Queer. We're Married.
* Cambridge: We're Smarter Than You
* Eat Nothing but Chowder
* 300 Years of Prudishness

That Sounds Vantastic... On July 3 Chrysler hosted the Minivan Summer Games on Boston Common. Families vied to win the regional competition by stuffing as much crap as they could into a minivan in the shortest amount of time. The winning team, the Wunder family, goes to New York July 31 for the national finals, where they'll have a chance to win the grand prize, a van and a trip around the world. We'd encourage them to represent for Boston, but the Wunders hail from Rochester, N.Y. We Wunder how they were eligible.

CHIPS AHOY

Meet the newest player on the world poker scene.

I love fads. Sometimes I go too far, like when I went anti-carb and replaced my car's carburetor with a piece of bacon. But fad-following is the reason I'm writing the pilot for a home-makeover show where three gay guys go into your house and steal all your pasta. It's going to make me rich. Which is fortunate, because I'm also into another fad that requires major capital: poker.

There was a story on Fox news the other night about how people around the city are playing poker tournaments in their houses, and how that's illegal or something. I didn't watch all of it because I was too busy practicing how I'd bet an off-suit Q-6 if I was in the small blind at my friends' weekly home poker tournament. I don't see how it's illegal to run your own game anyway—you see the Sopranos playing poker in the back room of the Bada Bing all the time, and HBO wouldn't show people doing things that are against the law. But with that in mind, I guess I shouldn't reveal where I played my first poker tournament last week, because the next thing you know the cops will be knocking on the door wanting to stop our harmless fun, just like that guy we killed did.

I'm joking—or am I? If you're a little unsure, it's because I'm a poker player now. I'm inherently sketchy and possibly dangerous. I use a toothpick instead of dental floss. Like the script to an episode of North Shore, I'm unreadable. Before I played poker, I was the kind of guy who smiled. In other words, easy prey, a can of Alpo for the big dogs. An open can of Alpo, because otherwise that metaphor would be all wrong.

So you probably want to know how I did. Well, I won. I won it all in my first tourney. I had so many chips at the end, I was in danger of winning Erik Estrada. My strategy was to act like I completely didn't know what I was doing. This was easy, because I completely didn't know what I was doing. I was unsure of when to bet, how much to bet, or what my hand meant. I didn't understand any of the terminology, and when other players would say things like, "I can't believe you beat me with a nut flush on the river," I'd hear "Blah blah blah you beat me blah blah." But to get back to the point: I won, so obviously all these people selling poker how-to books are leading you in the wrong direction. Ignorance is the way to go.

With this approach, I hope to emulate top players like Chris Moneymaker and have a very implausible name. I'm thinking that if a guy named Ezra Winsallyourmoney sits down at the table, right away you're scared and will probably play right into my hands. In another innovation, I plan to one-up the Unabomber, who wears a hooded sweatshirt and sunglasses to psych out his opposition and hide his facial expressions. I'm going to wear a burka under a football helmet. Like my name, this will make everyone very uneasy. When I want to be dramatic, I will slowly remove the football helmet, then suddenly tear off the burka and pretend I'm looking at my competitors through a periscope. When I fold up my imaginary periscope and order the torpedo tubes flooded, that will be my signature move that lets the other players know they're about to lose some serious chips. Poker purists will say I'm one of the new breed of hot-doggers who is ruining the once-proud game with my outrageous antics, like when I run around the table between hands yelling "Duck! Duck! Goose!" or refer to my chips as "my Priz-ningles." Ben Affleck will demand I be banned from the World Series of Poker after I eliminate him while dressed as Daredevil.

So why is poker so hot right now, you ask? As an experienced player, let me try to explain. Part of it is because of the emergence of Texas Hold'Em, which is much more exciting than any other kind of poker for some reason. And part of it is because people are burned out on other games—we all knew the Go Fish explosion of the late '90s had to end sooner or later, and it did when Rummy 500 burst onto the scene. But this poker thing is here to stay. It's got all the elements of a winner: drama, suspense, skill, the vagaries of chance, a Kenny Rogers song about it. Kenny Rogers doesn't get inspired by just any game, Oh. It's not, "You've gotta know when to connect four, know when to neglect four."

Now let's order some bacon, crack Coke C2 and get this game started. IB

Buying, Selling, Renting? Visit Boston's best address: www.BostonRealEstate.net

As recently as the late 1990's, one could scarcely find a real estate web site. Today, three out of four homebuyers begin their search online using an Internet search engine. ERA Boston Real Estate Group was among the first real estate companies to embrace and harness the power of the Internet which has changed the industry forever. With thousands of new, unique visits each day, and first-page placement in all the major search engines, The ERA Boston Real Estate Group web site is the most powerful online real estate searching and marketing tool in the area.

Looking to buy? Why not use the same tools that professional real estate agents use. Thousands of new buyers have registered for ERA Boston Real Estate Group's award-winning search tools because they give you the buyer direct access to the industry standard multiple listing databases. Join the literally thousands of new homebuyers who visit our site each day, see for yourself what's on the market for sale, and find the house or apartment that's right for you.

Looking to sell? Why not expose your property to thousands of qualified buyers every day. Listing with us means featured placement in our web site and exposure to thousands of qualified buyers who visit our site each day for the express purpose of finding a place to live. Trying to sell on your own? We even offer a broker-assisted FSBO plan that gives you placement in the multiple listing service and costs less than advertising in the newspaper.

Looking to rent? Why not see hundreds of apartment listings, prices, sizes, and locations. The ERA Boston Real Estate Group leasing division is one of the top rental operations in the city. Our highly ethical and professional agents rent hundreds of apartments each year to students, professionals, and families all over the Boston area. Visit our site and let us know what you're looking for. We'll take you out and show you places that work for you.

Looking for a great job? Why not call us or send along a resume. We're always looking for hungry, self-motivated people. Prior real estate experience preferred, not required. Already an agent somewhere else? Maybe you could use a change and dozens of new buyer leads a month. Guaranteed. Call Nancy Weddleton or e-mail your resume to careers@bostonrealestate.net.

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLIN

JOHNNY D. GOOD

A shaggy leader emerges for the Red Sox; Manny finds his place—and some chemistry.

I have some advice for Johnny Damon's barber: Get lost. His mane's fine the way it is. In fact, it still has some growing to do, so your services won't be needed.

Hair aside, Johnny Damon is showing Boston that he's not just a barber's nightmare. He's also become the kind of player—and especially the kind of leadoff hitter—that the Red Sox have craved for years.

Damon has been an interesting player in the three seasons since former Red Sox GM Dan Duquette signed him to a four-year, $32 million contract. Despite some flashes of brilliance—he was a late vote-in for the 2002 All-Star game—he hasn't been everything a lot of people expected. He's been good at times, scoring runs and fighting off pitches, but overall, something was missing. Until now.

Let's talk about his leadership skills. When the Red Sox went 1-5 on their pre–All Star break road trip, there were a lot of grim faces in the Sox clubhouse. Guys were running for cover. Not Johnny Damon. He stood there in front of tape recorders, cameras and microphones and challenged everybody on the team to "look into the mirror." Damon himself might see something that resembles Cousin It staring back at him, but his words may have helped rouse a sleeping giant.

Not only did he give his teammates an indirect slap, he took his game to a level most of us had never seen before at the leadoff position. Damon's 16-game hitting streak to end the first half was inspirational. He hit .436 during that span, including—get this—six home runs, 11 RBIs and 23 runs scored. Call the boys over at Engine Eight: Johnny D is on fire. Leadoff legends like Rickey Henderson and Lou Brock often changed games with their presence on the basepaths, but it would be hard to find any stretch in their careers where they went on a tear like Damon's.

Let's not be fooled. If there's any chance of the Red Sox going places they haven't been in the past 86 years, then Manny Ramirez and David Ortiz will need to be MVP contenders, and Curt Schilling and Pedro Martinez will need to be Cy Young Award candidates.

But it all starts with the man in the mirror, Johnny Damon.

Speaking of Manny and Ortiz, if you're looking for a midseason MVP for the American League, we probably have the two favorites right here in this Red Sox tandem.

Manny is on target for 49 home runs an 145 RBIs, the kind of numbers he used t produce in Cleveland, and Big Poppy Or is right on his tail, on pace for 43 hom runs and 147 RBIs. Talk about the Bas Brothers.

What's the key to the Sox keeping up th level of production? How about happines Don't laugh. After three seasons, Manu has finally grown comfortable in his su roundings and has settled in as one of "us. And who wouldn't want to play on th same team as the perpetually jovial Ortiz?

But I'd point to another key player du ing this recent Sox resurgence, and it' probably surprise you: Kevin Millar. On of the great Red Sox stories to watch th season has been the relationship betwee Manny Ramirez and Millar. Ramirez, native of the Dominican Republic wh grew up in New York City, and Millar, Texan, have become tight friends on an off the field.

> DAMON STOOD THERE IN FRONT OF THE CAMERAS AND MICROPHONES AND CHALLENGED EVERYBODY ON THE TEAM TO "LOOK INTO THE MIRROR"

When Manny obtained his U.S. citize ship recently, it was Millar who sa "You're just like me now. You're a redneck Manny apparently replied that Millar w now eligible to join his "Players Club."

It's a joy to see and unusual because the most part, American players usua hang with the American players and Lat players tend to hang with their Latin tea mates. We have to credit Millar for ste ping out of the box and embracing Man when a lot of us, including Red Sox ma agement, were looking to lose him in son nearby dump.

We should add Ortiz to the mix, too and Millar bring more than their bats the ballpark every day. They bring th smiles. And for years, smiles were aplenty in Red Sox clubhouses. IB

Thirteen is seldom heralded as a lucky number, but in the case of this, the IMPROPER's 13th annual Boston's Best issue, we feel fortunate to have snagged one of the hottest young stars in television to grace our cover—Medford native and Entertainment Tonight co-host Maria Menounos. Menounos' résumé reads like it's compiled from the credits of five different overachievers, and includes tits as an international news correspondent, actress, model, film producer and humanitarian. And she's only in her 20s. We'd like to think the Boston's Best issue mirrors Menounos' ambitious M.O., as we've endeavored to single out the finest our city has to offer in more than 300 categories, spanning genres from Food & Drink to Bars & Clubs, Fashion to Media. We don't have a section for Boston's Most Beautiful People, but if we did, Menounos would be at the top of the list.

MARIA MENOUNOS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Medford native Maria Menounos, although still in her 20s, has enjoyed success as an entertainment reporter, journalist, actress, filmmaker and humanitarian. A former model and Miss Massachusetts Teen USA, she studied broadcast journalism and film at Emerson College, where she was the first freshman in the school's history to win one of its Evvy awards for achievement in performing arts and media. She also hosted a Greek-American talk show on WNRB-AM, and during her sophomore year, became involved in a film project, In the Land of Merry Misfits (which she recently rescued, providing the financing to complete it). After her junior year at Emerson, she was hired as an international correspondent/anchor for the Channel One Network, which beams a satellite newscast to 8 million students daily during the school year. Her assignments included interviewing President Bush and covering the AIDS epidemic in South Africa—a trip that inspired her to found Take Action Hollywood!, a nonprofit that uses the power of the entertainment industry to effect social change. The group has produced a commercial on AIDS awareness and promoted pet adoption. As a journalist, Menounos is the host of both ET on MTV and ET on VH1 and appears nightly as a co-host and journalist for Entertainment Tonight and ET Weekend. As an actress, she recently landed a recurring role on the CBS series Without a Trace. She is also working on a joint venture with Miramax Films, promoting Paper Clips, a Holocaust documentary. A Los Angeles resident, Menounos volunteers at dog shelters and has four adopted dogs.

Jonathan Soroff: You're an actress, journalist, humanitarian, producer. What's left?

Maria Menounos: There's a lot I want to do. Like direct.

JS: Ahh, the old cliché. If you had to give up one thing, what would it be, and why?

MM: I wouldn't give up anything. I can do it all.

JS: So where do you get the energy? Coffee? Red Bull? Cocaine?

MM: I don't really drink coffee. I never wanted to be one of those people who can't get up without coffee in the morning. I'd rather use that extra 15 minutes to sleep.

JS: Most awkward celebrity moment? Ever call someone the wrong name, or something like that?

MM: Sometimes when you're on the red carpet, a publicist will push their client in front of you, and you have no idea who they are, what they're about or why they're there. So you have to do that little dance of, "So…what brings you out tonight?"

JS: Most embarrassing question you've ever had to ask?

MM: I won't ask anything I wouldn't want to be asked. Even if I'm told by my bosses that they want me to ask something, if it doesn't seem right at that moment, I'm not going to go there.

JS: So "How much do you weigh?" is probably somewhere you wouldn't go?

MM: Yeah, something totally personal, like Brittany Murphy breaking off her engagement and seeming really upset and really uncomfortable about it—I'm not gonna go there.

JS: Hollywood story you covered that you just couldn't get enough of?

MM: Oh God, it's the opposite, because we live and breathe it. I'd get calls from my mother, "How many times can we see J. Lo, Maria? Every day, J. Lo."

JS: So you get sick of it?

MM: During that moment of madness, yeah. You're like, "Enough." And J. Lo was probably saying the same thing.

JS: Are you a busybody?

MM: As far as caring about that stuff? No. I have no interest in it. I'm not trying to find out the scoop. If I hear something juicy, it usually goes in one ear and out the other, because if I'm hearing it, so is someone else and it'll come out eventually. I'm friends with so many of these celebrities; I'd never want to be the one who brought something like that out.

JS: As an actor yourself, do you think you can relate better to the celebrities you cover?

MM: I think I have sensitivity because I was acting before I got into journalism. ET was kind of a fluke. I studied journalism in college, but I studied filmmaking as well, and I wanted to pursue that. I think my father willed the journalism thing to happen, because that's what he wanted me to do. Don't get me wrong. I enjoy it. I love my job, but I was more diehard about going on stories as an international correspondent. Interviewing the president, or going on assignment to South Africa, that was more interesting to me than whose marriage is on the rocks. Their lives are so overexposed as it is.

JS: Speaking of interviewing George W., did he make a pass at you?

MM: No. [Laughs.] I do think he took a liking to me, though. It was so last-minute, and I was so excited to get the nod to be the one who interviewed him. They said, "He's only going to give you two questions. That's it." OK, fine. I got to ask my two questions, but I think he felt comfortable, because he stayed for like 25 minutes and I got to ask him everything else I wanted to ask.

JS: Most appalling trend in the entertainment industry today?

MM: I used to think it was wearing Uggs, but then I got a pair.

JS: Ever looked at your MTV and VH1 wardrobe and wondered, "Why?"

MM: No. Have you?

JS: Truthfully, yes. I've wondered why they make you wear such skimpy outfits.

MM: When we have ratings that are climbing every day, and a million and a half viewers per episode, I think it's workin'.

JS: First thought when you were named one of 2004's 50 Most Beautiful People by People magazine?

MM: I was completely shocked. It was all these A-list movie stars and pro athletes, and then a few random people like me, so it was pretty ridiculous.

JS: When do you think you'll make the cover of Vanity Fair*?*

MM: I've got a little time. I'm workin' on it. I don't like to put time limits on things because then you're watching the sand go through the hourglass instead of paying attention to what you're supposed to be doing.

JS: When you were Miss Massachusetts Teen USA, what was your talent?

MM: There was no talent involved. [Laughs.] But I used to joke that if there was a talent competition, I would burp, because I'm really good at it. I can out-burp anyone on this planet. But at some point you have to start acting like a lady. So only on rare occasions, I'll let one out.

JS: Your charity, Take Action Hollywood!, is supposed to make people in the entertainment industry more socially aware. Does that mean you'll be convincing Russell Crowe not to act like an asshole in public?

MM: Ah, no. What it means is that we the media to effect social change. We got behind a documentary called Paper Clips, which is about the Holocaust, a once I got people there to see it, I ha theater full of the highest-level executi in this industry bawling their brains o It's an amazing film in that truly speaks all races, religions and ethnicities.

JS: Child star whose career is most due for comeback?

MM: Natalie from The Facts of Life.

JS: Good answer. Hollywood star you thin is most likely to move to Massachusetts an take advantage of gay marriage?

MM: Matt and Ben someday, only beca they joke about it all the time.

JS: Isn't it really sad about Lindsay Lohan

MM: What about her?

JS: I don't know. I was just trying to get so dirt out of you. Think there's any truth to rumor about Brad Pitt and Tom Cruise?

MM: What rumor?

JS: You just won't fall into my traps, will you? What do you like to do when you co town?

MM: Depending on the season, I go to Patriots, Red Sox, Celtics or Bruins gar I get all their games on DirecTV, but nothing like seeing them play live. I need to get back to my uncle Nick's li restaurant on the water and see the tr Other than that, it's as much Dun Donuts, Brigham's, Papa Gino's or B that I can consume—we don't have stuff in L.A.

JS: OK, three things you miss most about Medford?

MM: I miss B-Boys, which are these ridiculous breakfast sandwiches you ge Jim's Market in North Medford, up in Heights, and you have no idea…and Bob's on Main Street has the meanest steak and cheese subs. And I miss Kell in Revere.

JS: Favorite childhood memory?

MM: Singing in church choir and perf ing in plays.

JS: Dream role?

MM: Probably in a musical.

JS: So you sing too? Name one thing you can't do.

MM: I don't know how to fight a fire. I rosurgery…

MEET THE JUDGES

"The best things in life are free."

"The best is yet to come."

"You're the best thing that ever happened to me."

For some reason, we humans feel an undeniable ed to quantify and compare, to decide not only at's good but what's better than that. It's human ture—determining the sine qua non, the ne plus ra—which is why we bust our humps to bring you r annual Boston's Best issue.

The drudgery of deciding the superlatives among e food, drink, arts, entertainment, fashion, goods, vices, media, business and personalities that ston has to offer is a painstaking task, but some- dy's got to do it. And thankfully, it's not just us.

Here's how it works: In early spring, we organize a ner party to which we invite some of the city's st prominent and opinionated people.

This year, our panel of judges included: Todd English, chef/owner of Olives and the Olive oup; Richard L. Friedman, real estate developer d president and CEO, Carpenter & Co. Inc.; kko Nissinen, artistic director of the Boston Ballet; ven Maler, artistic director of the Commonwealth akespeare Company and vice president of artistic ogramming at the Wang Center for the Performing ts; Frank Guidara, president and CEO of Au Bon Pain; Jim Koch, CEO of Boston Beer Co.; Donna M. Morrissey, director of corporate affairs for American Red Cross Blood Services–New England Region; Bryan Rafanelli, event planner and owner of Rafanelli Events; Ida Faber, CEO of Salon Mario Russo; Maggie Trichon, owner of modeling agency Maggie Inc.; John Tobin, Boston city councillor; Dennis Quilty, lawyer and partner at McDermott, Quilty & Miller; Matt Siegel, host of Matty in the Morning on KISS 108 FM; Lisa Roach, producer and on-air personality for Matty in the Morning on KISS 108 FM; John "Sib" Hashian, former drummer of the rock band Boston; Abi Ross Goodman, art dealer and director/curator/co-owner of the Judi Rotenberg Gallery; Doris Yaffe, project consultant for the nonprofit and international community; Bob Neumeier, sports anchor and host of the Dale & Neumy Show on WEEI 850 AM; Julie Kahn, general manager of WEEI 850 AM (not pictured); and Glenn Jones, reporter for FOX25 News (not pictured).

Also on hand were key members of our editorial staff, and given the impressive guest list, you'll forgive us for bragging that it was the best dinner party we went to all year. This year, it was graciously hosted by Todd English in a private room at Olives, and after plying our guests with food and drink (and more food, and more drink), we got down to the dirty business of voting for the winner in each of our categories. Judges who had a vested interest in a specific category recused themselves.

Next came the tedious part: tallying the votes, reviewing and approving the winners, and researching and writing about them. For this, we relied on our crack team of interns: Abby Bielagus, Megan Grant and Patrice Taddonio, who did all the heavy lifting and together compiled almost everything you're about to read.

The result is our annual list of the best Boston has to offer in every category we thought might be of interest to our readers.

We hope you find this issue useful and keep it around for reference throughout the coming year, to help you navigate the tricky waters of where to eat, shop, etc. Of course, you undoubtedly have favorites of your own in each category, and it's our sincere hope that you enjoy comparing our choices with yours. Should you disagree with anything we've written, please don't hesitate to contact us to express your dissent and help us come up with a better selection for next year.

So enjoy, and keep one other thing in mind: The best things in life are not only free; they're completely subjective.

—Jonathan Soroff

BAGELS

Finagle a Bagel

Multiple locations,
www.finagleabagel.com

Lo, as David slew Goliath, so did one Beantown baker bring down the faithless giants of Gotham in a bagel-making battle that proveth the waters of Boston were like unto wine…or so the story of this bagel shop goes (sort of). Beginning with the old-fashioned process of kettle-boiling and ending in the rise of a local chain that showers the works on bagel lovers, Finagle offers roughly 18 standard and seasonal flavors—like apple-caramel, triple chocolate chip and jalapeño-cheddar—along with about nine regular and rotating spreads, including salmon, apple-streusel and olive (some come in light versions too). But there's more. Some 30 bagel sandwiches and pizzas adorn the menu—downright fancy creations like the smoky avocado flatbread pizza with herbed cream cheese, mozzarella and corn, or the smoked-turkey melt with black bean spread and Monterey Jack. Behold that, New York philistines!

BARBECUE

Blue Ribbon Bar-B-Q

908 Mass. Ave., Arlington, 781-648-7427;
1375 Washington St., West Newton, 617-332-2583;
www.blueribbonbbq.com

Blue Ribbon is a real trip. We mean that neither literally—both locations are in nearby suburbs—nor slangily; no hookah dens or LED panels to confound your senses at these downscale joints. No, we mean it in a culinary sense, as the menu takes you on a virtual nationwide barbecue tour: to Tennessee with its dry-rubbed pork ribs; North Carolina via vinegar-spiked pulled pork; Texas, where beef brisket awaits; Kansas City for saucy burnt ends; and even off the mainland to Jamaica, for jerked chicken and burritos stuffed with the meat of your choice. What's more, they're all spot-on renditions that, when accompanied by just-so baked beans and cornbread, take you to a new level of fulfillment. And you won't even have to use vacation time to get there.

BEST-KEPT SECRET

Pino Maffeo at Restaurant L

Louis Boston, 234 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-266-4680,
www.louisboston.com

Back at AZ in New York, Pino Maffeo was earning three stars with Patricia Yeo; here in Boston, he's sprinkling those stars in the eyes of his customers at Louis Boston's restaurant, L. Arriving by a circuitous route that included a childhood spent in London and East Boston and cooking stints on both coasts, Maffeo brings with him a modern culinary sensibility that values cross-cultural experience over ethnic inheritance. Italian by birth, he also brought with him chef de cuisine Soulayphet Schwader of Laos, with whom he works to create a repertoire that isn't about a type of cuisine, but about technique. Maffeo's approach—extending to all parts of the world and drawing on those things that influence him—leads to discoveries that ricochet with flavor, like fried oysters wrapped in watermelon with mint salad, or soft-shell crab tempura with avocado and caramelized grapefruit. When Bostonians discover Maffeo, they'll thank their lucky stars.

BETWEEN MEALS

Brasserie Jo

The Colonnade Hotel, 120 Huntington Ave., Boston,
617-425-3240, www.brasseriejoboston.com

Whether we're taking a shopping break or ducking in from a downpour, there's something so warm and inviting about the back-lit zinc bar at Brasserie Jo, with its retro fluorescent clock and hard-boiled-egg racks; something so civilized about the hushed between-meal lull; something oh-so-Euro about unwinding over a midafternoon Lillet Blanc or Stella Artois that we invariably head here whenever our very American itineraries allow. And we're irresistibly drawn to a bar menu that lets us graze like the suave sophisticates we are: on escargot with garlic butter and superbly zesty steak tartare; on meltingly rich croques monsieurs and house-made pâté. Sometimes we forget to return to our regular schedules altogether.

BREAKFAST

Soundbites

708 Broadway, Somerville, 617-623-8338

At this tiny nosh nook, our favorite meal is served (and served well) any time of the day. The pancakes and French toast are worthy of hymns, and what Soundbites does with eggs—whether you order them over easy, in a whites-only omelette or à la Benedict—is enough to make a grown man cry. Whatever you order, skipping the mashed home fries is not an option. The well-seasoned mix of whipped, mashed, baked potatoes is heaven sent. A word to the wise: If you decide to eat breakfast at a normal hour (any time before noon on a weekend), be prepared to wait for a table, and make the wait more bearable with some self-serve coffee.

BRUNCH

Henrietta's Table

Charles Hotel, 1 Bennett St., Cambridge, 617-661-5005, www.charleshotel.com

West of New England, any eatery this decked out in rustic Americana would be saddled with a name like Kountry Kitchen. Instead, this Charles Hotel fixture owes its moniker to the memory of the hotel proprietor's pet hog. Yet somehow it aces the sophistication test that is the urbane brunch. On Saturdays, the à la carte menu (three courses for $24) satisfies savant sleepyheads with dishes created and whipped up weekly. (Recent palate-pleasers include BBQ pulled pork over polenta and deliciously thick banana bread French toast.) On Sundays, the copious brunch buffet includes a raw bar, omelette station and carving block as well as numerous entrée specials and dessert choices, for $39 per person. Talk about going hog wild.

BURGER

HIDDEN GEM

Zon's

[illegible] Perkins St., Jamaica Plain, 617-524-9667
www.zonsjp.com

Not just another hip and trendy Jamaica Plain hat that attracts attention for no other reason than th on the red-painted walls. The food is good, an prices aren't from fantasyland. A seemingly straig ward menu offers a few pleasant curveballs: a chips dip appetizer, for instance, consists of per browned, hand-cut potato slices, and the dip i with caramelized onion and garlic. Otherwise, or dishes are similarly tweaked. The sirloin meat served with seasonally changing sides including ha verts, ratatouille, and sour cream and chive m potatoes with a roasted-shallot gravy. Just whe thought a turkey burger could never match th thing, Zon's serves up one with gruyere and roaste tobello. The drink selection is equally delightful: C from an impressive beer list or two flavors of Zon white, made with orange juice and ginger beer, o with orange juice and pear nectar. Proof that a gre ner doesn't have to be a major production.

he menu. All the burgers, and many other food items, aptly named for a celebrity or politician, like the Dick eney—a hefty bacon cheeseburger that's only "a heart- t away"—or the Ted Kennedy—"a plump, liberal ount of burger with cheddar cheese and mushrooms." e menu boasts 27 burgers, each featuring imaginative pings, cooked perfectly to your specifications. And t's a burger without fries or onion rings, followed by a pe for dessert? All these are done brilliantly by Mr. B., gnore your inner cardiologist and indulge. You can get ioplasty later.

BURRITOS

Anna's Taqueria

1412 Beacon St., Brookline, 617-739-7300;
446 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-277-7111;
822 Somerville Ave., Cambridge, 617-661-8500;
236A Elm St., Somerville, 617-666-3900

ou don't think Bostonians have a flair for fanati- m, we guess you've never been to Fenway—or to this fast-food franchise, where avid regulars brave endless lines to get their fix of tacos, quesadillas and, above all, burritos. Super burritos, that is, since for a measly few pesetas more than you'd pay for the regular size, you might as well get the whole, um, enchilada: a grande tortilla stuffed with black or pinto beans, rice, cheese and your mainstay of choice—steak, chicken, carnitas (Mexican roast pork), chili verde (spicy pork) or chunky, grilled mixed vegetables—plus salsa and hot sauce, all rolled up before your eyes in an atmosphere of brisk good cheer. The resulting addiction is far more satisfying, and undoubtedly healthier, than any Red Sox mania.

BUZZ

Union Bar & Grille

1357 Washington St., Boston, 617-423-0555,
www.unionrestaurant.com

The name connotes more than the South End location at the corner of Union Park and Washington Street: Three veteran restaurateurs—Jeff Gates, Matt Burns and executive chef Seth Woods—have teamed up to create a dining hot spot that exceeds all expectations and deserves all the hype it's been generating since it opened in October. The menu is contemporary American, ranging from a sweet pea and ricotta ravioli in an herb broth to a good old-fashioned Reuben. The bar scene is as sizzling as it gets, and the dining room is one of the sexiest in Boston, with shiny, black leather banquettes, an eye-level band of mirrors, and wrought-iron chandeliers that create a minimalist yet elegant backdrop for the dining experience. Don't miss the calamari (so popular it's become a permanent menu item) or the 10K Tuna (so named because the recipe won a $10,000 prize for its secret blend of seasonings). The well-trained staff at Union is attentive without being overbearing, and the stylish crowd will make you feel like you've come to the right place. Everyone from Mitt Romney to John Kerry to the producers of Queer Eye for the Straight Guy has been spotted here.

UP-AND-COMING CHEF
Jeremy Sewall, Great Bay
500 Comm. Ave., Boston, 617-532-5300, www.hotelcommonwealth.com

The man in the chef's chapeau at the newest restaurant from the team that brought you Radius and Via Matta is Jeremy Sewall, whose deceptively boyish demeanor belies a wealth of experience at restaurants in Europe as well as at L'Espalier. Sewall places such an emphasis on freshness that he is often awakened at 4 am by fishermen at the dock, calling to tell him about their catch. He's also been known to drive all the way to Maine to buy lobsters off the boat from a cousin who's a lobsterman. The result is a seafood restaurant worthy of the word "great." In fact, people we know who don't generally like fish have waxed rhapsodic about how great Great Bay is. It's an odd blend of new American cuisine presented in high style with a focus on freshness – for instance, we can easily imagine Sewall striding through the stunning, contemporary two-story dining room with a fishing rod over his shoulder if someone told him the striped bass were biting in Boston Harbor.

CAESAR SALAD
Sonsie
327 Newbury St., Boston, 617-351-2500, www.sonsieboston.com

It's become a staple of our diet, so it's amazing how many restaurants do it badly, but Newbury Street's eternally chic hangout has the Caesar down pat. Sonsie's version has fresh, crispy chunks of romaine, homemade croutons with real zip and a dressing that perfectly balances the flavors of lemon, anchovy paste and Parmesan cheese. One thing that's notably absent? Eggs, which is good news for those who like their Caesar topped with chicken (there's something undeniably creepy about eating eggs and chicken together). For a seafood twist, there's the Caesar with rock shrimp. However you order it, this is what a Caesar salad is supposed to taste like.

CAPPUCCINO
Caffé Vittoria
290-296 Hanover St., Boston, 617-227-7606, www.vittoriacaffe.com

There's a subtle and distinctly Italian art to making a cappuccino (or even a simple espresso, for that matter), and the assembly-line version served by monolithic coffee chains doesn't begin to do it justice. Fortunately for Bostonians, there's this Hanover Street institution where the rich and complex espresso is topped off with a generous dollop of perfectly steamed milk and sprinkled with your choice of cocoa, cinnamon or nothing at all. The pressed-tin ceiling and old-world ambience will make you feel like you've been transported to a great little negozio di caffé near the Piazza di Spagna. In Italy, good coffee is a religion, and in Boston's traditionally Italian neighborhood, this place is the mother church.

CASUAL DINING
Claremont Café
535 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-247-9001, www.claremontcafe.com

For all of Boston's excellent dining options, it's difficult to find a place where you don't have to care what your hair looks like or put much thought into what you're wearing, which makes us especially grateful for the Claremont Café. The eatery is laid-back and unfussy to an almost Californian extreme: A pair of jeans and flip-flops is totally acceptable dinner attire. There's brunch on the weekend, and Tuesday through Friday breakfast, lunch and dinner (which is also available Saturday) are served. The food is a satisfying mix of seasonally shifting Mediterranean and American dishes. For dinner, try the popular beef ravioli or an assortment of tapas, like crispy duck dumplings in a red curry sauce. Lunch options include creative salads like the Sicilian, with olives, cucumbers, orange, mint and a creamy feta dressing. Eggs are found in tasty scrambles, frittatas and omelettes. Best of all, the prices are shockingly reasonable by South End standards, and despite the café's small size, you'll never feel rushed.

CHINESE FOOD
Bernard's
The Mall at Chestnut Hill, 199 Boylston St., Newton, 617-969-3388

A revelation for anyone used to the kind of Sino-American dragon palace fare that's heavy on sticky sauces and MSG, this is gourmet Chinese food, prepared in traditional style, from the finest ingredients. The pleasant yet understated dining room is merely a backdrop for the magnificent delicacies that come out of the kitchen, from family favorites like salt and pepper shrimp, spareribs and Peking duck to such exquisite specialties as cold sesame noodles, garlic lobster and crispy sea bass. INDIAN

Gourmet India

The Shops at Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., Boston, 617-247-9500; 1335 Beacon St., Brookline, 617-734-3971; www.gourmet-india.com

Good and cheap, end of story. The menu features all your Indian favorites, including numerous vegetarian options. The service is fast and efficient, so it's a quick, easy Indian fix whether you're overworked and too tired to cook or you want a quick bite before going out for the evening. The heady aroma of exotic spices will have your mouth watering before you get your food home. Major bang for your dining buck, with no dishes to wash afterward.

CHINESE

Chang's House

1583 Comm. Ave., Brighton, 617-787-5030

There's something so gratifying about holding that cardboard box in one hand and a pair of chopsticks in the other and shoveling yummy Chinese food down your gullet. When that urge hits, the voice on the other end of the line should be someone at Chang's House. Not only is the food delicious (we recommend their to-die-for tofu dishes and the stellar chicken in black bean sauce), it's extraordinarily affordable. Everyone who works there is super-friendly. Plus, they deliver. All that, and a fortune cookie.

MEXICAN

Andalé

125 Summer St., Boston, 617-737-2820, www.andaleboston.com

When you want fast and tasty Mexican food, this satellite of Olé Mexican Grill is muy rapido y muy bueno. Besides traditional tacos, burritos and enchiladas bursting with the best ingredients, it offers a create-your-own-quesadilla menu with everything from mashed potatoes to portobello mushrooms. Hands down, the best call-it-a-wrap food around. When you're in a hurry, just remember what Speedy Gonzalez says: "Andalé!"

or hot and sour soup receive star treatment, and spa selections offer healthy options for diners watching their waistlines. Our advice is to go with a group of friends so that you can sample a variety of dishes, and to wear pants with an elastic waistband, because even if you order light, everything is so delicious you'll end up stuffing yourself.

CLAM CHOWDER

Legal Sea Foods

Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-266-7775; 26 Park Square, Boston, 617-426-4444; The Shops at Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., Boston, 617-266-6800; other locations; www.legalseafoods.com

Unfortunately, when many restaurants attempt to make this classic New England dish, it winds up looking like the viscous paste we used in third-grade art class to make papier-mâche. Not at Legal, where the deservedly famous chowder is consistently creamy, with the ideal balance of perfectly cooked potatoes and clams. For anyone worried about their waistline, Legal even has a low-fat version made without cream, and although the broth is almost clear, it won't leave you resenting your diet. When we want an art project, we go to an art supplies store. When we want chowder, we head to Legal.

COMFORT FOOD

Silvertone

69 Bromfield St., Boston, 617-338-7887

Lasting appeal—it isn't easy to create, articulate or duplicate, but when a joint's got it, everyone knows it. And this downtown bar and grill, with its cozy, retro ambiance, has still got it. Of course, you can chalk a huge chunk of its popularity up to one simple dish—macaroni and cheese, itself chunky, cheddar-hunky and topped with buttered crumbs. But the whole menu abounds with people's choices, from the surprisingly light, crispy two-pepper-and-cheese quesadilla to a burger that boasts connoisseur cred, to the meatloaf with mashed potatoes and the gravy-smothered grilled pork chops. Well-prepared and downright cheap, it's all genuine comfort food at a time when any old greasy thing aims for the name. For that alone, may Silvertone never tarnish.

CUISINE YOU'VE YET TO DISCOVER

Restaurante Cesaria

266 Bowdoin St., Dorchester, 617-282-1998, www.restaurantecesaria.com

According to the 2000 U.S. Census, there are just over 20,000 Cape Verdeans living in the metro Boston area. All you have to do to experience a taste of their diverse cuisine is grab a table at the warm, sophisticated Restaurante Cesaria. The food, like the culture, is influenced by Portugal, Spain and Africa. Traditional dishes such as fried yucca and canja, a Cape Verdean rice and chicken soup, are served alongside American fare. Be adventurous and try their version of the national dish, katchupada, a slow-simmered stew of hominy, beans, pork and kale. For less adventurous taste buds, there's an extensive selection of seafood entrées, sandwiches, salads and vegetarian options. All dishes are reasonably priced, and on weekends

FOOD TREND

Mini burgers at Spire

Nine Zero Hotel, 90 Tremont St., Boston, 617-772-2020; www.spirerestaurant.com

When the White Castle chain originated the bite-size burger all those years ago, no one ever would have guessed that the snack would reemerge decades later on the menu at chic restaurants like Spire. Diners at the sleek bar inside the boutique hotel can enjoy them as an appetizer or the main event. A set of three mini burgers is served open-faced with a selection of gourmet toppings like morel and green garlic relish, scotch bonnet ketchup and sweet pea pancetta mignonette. The accompaniments change seasonally (executive chef Gabriel Frasca says future toppings may include corn relish and heirloom tomato), but the burgers themselves are perfect for snacking any time of the year.

DELI
Sam LaGrassa's

44 Province St., Boston, 617-357-6861, www.samlagrassas.com

How long does it take to make a perfect sandwich? Thirty-five years and counting, according to the crew at this Downtown Crossing lunch spot, where the art is learned and relearned six days a week. Be they wraps or old-fashioned stacks, classics like tuna salad or creations like grilled portobello and Monterey Jack, Sam's sandwiches garner gasps for their heft and groans of pleasure for their craft. But the goldest of gold medals goes to the Pastrami Traveler, which features Romanian pastrami and cheddar piled on grilled dark rye with tomatoes, onions and a spicy mustard-mayo spread. The "fresh from the pot" corned beef (meats are shipped in from New York and prepared in-house) is another contender. Finish one and you could win a prize for perseverance too.

DESSERT
Finale

1 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-423-3184;
30 Dunster St., Cambridge, 617-441-9797;
www.finaledesserts.com

Six years after the flagship's debut, there's still no place like Finale, the pair of posh, full-service "desserteries" that put sweets in their rightful place: front and center. And what a front, and what a center: From frosting to filling, crust to contents, executive pastry chef Nicole Coady's creations are lovely to look at and divine to dive into. The clear-cut favorite is the molten chocolate cake, its deliquescent warmth and sweetness offset both by pleasantly bitter coffee ice cream and chocolate-almond crunch. But the peanut butter mousse cake, layered with ganache, is also a marvel, rich yet not cloying. Meanwhile, seasonal options abound: delicate sorbets, profiteroles big as biscuits, sampler platters so whimsical they look like little fruit-and-chocolate circuses. Still not satisfied? Hit the bakery for cheesecake or cookies on your way out. You say Finale, we say Encore!

DINNER WITH LIVE MUSIC
Les Zygomates

129 South St., Boston, 617-542-5108, www.winebar.com

From the cheeky name (it refers to the facial muscles engaged in smiling) to the suave bistro decor—think banquettes and pillars, split levels and vintage posters in primary hues—this Leather District wine bar is as debonair as debonair gets. And all that style only enhances its substance: a thoughtful, polished menu backed by a smart and friendly wine list, in turn backed by jazz ensembles who do the background thing with verve. Just picture it: you and your honey sharing a bottle of Viognier or Gigondas, trading bites of the house pâté or an ever-sure poisson du jour (followed, if possible, by the intriguing green apple-Camembert galette), all to the smoky-smooth sounds of some seasoned trio. Are you smiling yet?

FRENCH RESTAURANT
L'Espalier

30 Gloucester St., Boston, 617-262-3023, www.lespalier.com

Along with Todd, Lydia, Gordon and one or two oth chefs with whom we imagine ourselves on a first-nam basis, owner Frank (as in McClelland) has proven linchpin in the local dining scene, which would look whole lot different without his Back Bay townhouse turned–exclusive French–New England restaurant. N only have beaucoup local chefs gotten their start in i kitchen over the years (including McClelland himse under original owner Moncef Meddeb), but even now, the wake of its silver anniversary, L'Espalier continues top the short list of special-occasion hot spots. In contra with the quietly elegant decor, calm mood and proper se vice, the food is ever-extravagant and bold (that t menu descriptions require semicolons says it all); t

MOST UNDERRATED RESTAURANT
Taranta

2 D Hanover St., Boston, 7-720-0052
www.tarantarist.com

Named after the tarantella, an Italian dance, this litt known North End gem produces food worthy of its o street festival. Unlike the surfeit of calamari-and-Chia places catering to tourists, Taranta combines Italian cuis with a hint of Peruvian influence, and the results are bo delicious and surprising. The decor a standard trattoria exposed brick walls, ceramic tiles—but the tables spaced far enough apart that you won't be privy to the c mas of your fellow diners. The menu takes its cues fr the coast, but revs up the creativity with exotic ingredie like huacatay (Peruvian black mint)—which finds a home ravioli—or a novel approach to a classic, like an espres crusted filet mignon. The Italian and South American flav may strike some as an unlikely pairing, but much like French and Italian immigrants who imported the tango Argentina, they turn out to be fabulous dance partners.

CHEESE SHOP

Formaggio Kitchen

244 Huron Ave., Cambridge, 617-354-4750;
268 Shawmut Ave., Boston, 617-350-6996;
www.formaggiokitchen.com

All the food shops that make Beantown chowhounds cram with pride (not to mention swoon with hunger), Ivan Gurdal's gourmet temple tops the list. As you enter the Cambridge store to feast your eyes on hundreds of cheeses of all shapes, sizes, origins and ages—the place is nationally known for both its underground ripening cave and its dedication to international artisanal producers—you can almost fathom a world without convenience stores, free of Velveeta. Samples are everywhere—savor a chunk of Shropshire blue or a schmear of Piedmontese robiola as you peruse not only the dairy cases but a stunning selection of imported meats, pantry staples, condiments and sweets from all over the states and Europe; a full greengrocery sits on the premises as well. One caveat: It's not humanly possible—even at the smaller South End outlet—to exit without blowing your diet or your budget or both.

ne list is duly impressive; and the exquisite details add to more than just a meal. A taste of Boston's culinary olution—and revolution.

FRIED CLAMS

Kelly's Roast Beef

410 Revere Beach Blvd., Revere, 781-284-9129, www.kellysroastbeef.com

his singular, family-owned restaurant, best known for ast beef, has also been cranking out exceptional fried ams at Boston's equivalent of Coney Island for more an 50 years. The clams are delivered fresh daily from e Chesapeake Bay and fried in pure vegetable oil (which changed each morning). The crispy, chewy result is worth all the calories. Open 363 days a year and offering a quintessential taste of summer year-round, Kelly's is the only reason most people we know ever venture all the way to Revere.

FROZEN YOGURT

Café Podima

168 Cambridge St., Boston, 617-227-4959,
www.cafepodima.com

Thanks to the recent '80s revival, not only is everything old new again, but apparently everything cold is cool again too. This sandwich shop at the edge of Beacon Hill reminds us why we loved frozen yogurt in its heyday, back when Prince was king—and why we still love it now. Because for all the wild flavors today's gourmet ice cream companies come up with, they can't possibly deliver the satisfaction we derive from our own creations, building on a base of soft-serve vanilla or chocolate yogurt with any of 65 mix-ins that range far beyond the usual choice of toppings offered in other stores. Besides M&Ms, there are Skor and Caramello; besides granola, there are Grape Nuts and Cracklin' Oat Bran; instead of artificial flavorings, there are real ingredients like ground coffee, cinnamon, and chunks of cheesecake and carrot cake. Why not celebrate Prince's comeback with a cone?

GREASY SPOON

Charlie's Sandwich Shoppe

429 Columbus Ave., Boston, 617-536-7669

Better yet, it's a shiny, happy spoon, wedged into its tight little drawer of a space in the South End, all Formica, vinyl and chrome. Along one wall, photos of customers span the decades (Charlie's opened in 1927); along the other runs the lunch counter and behind it the grill, where waitresses and fry cooks straight out of Mel's Diner maneuver with cast-iron pans and plates spilling over with American grub at its most authentic. Besides the celebrated turkey hash and eggs, there are goody-filled omelettes—as puffy as if they feel pride sitting alongside fat, golden home fries—and real griddle cakes (including the huge, scrumptious banana-pecan). Even lunchtime's mother lode of fried fare—from clams and chicken to onions and chips—is prepared with such care that a more positive epithet seems only fair: Let's call it a glistening spoon.

GREEK RESTAURANT

Mezé Estiatorio

100 City Square, Charlestown, 617-242-6393, www.mezeboston.com

This upscale Greek eatery made a big splash when it plunged into Charlestown last August—naturally, since everything about the place is big. The interior is big—seating 250 in the dining room and taverna, it boasts a bold, earthy palette punctuated by mosaics and murals. The crowd is big, as is the noise it generates. And the menu is big in every way: a lengthy list of enormous dishes (even the eponymous small plates are sizable) with plenty of zest. Think garlic and grape leaves, lemon and lamb, oregano and eggplant; think mint, honey and figs. Think wine from varietals cultivated since antiquity, and stone-ground coffee prepared in a sand-filled briki. And when you're done thinking, take your big appetite and head to Mezé.

GUARANTEED GREAT MEAL

Mistral

223 Columbus Ave., Boston 617-867-9300,
www.mistralbistro.com

Long-term success is a double-edged sword in the restaurant business: How can you continue to take the kinds of creative chances that got you where you are without alienating the loyal customers who made you a success? Mistral's Jamie Mammano is the rare restaurateur who manages to strike a balance between freshness and familiarity. Then again, his French-Mediterranean restaurant has always tempered drama with comfort, employing humble materials like terra-cotta and burlap to soften an architecturally imposing space; it has always separated sophistication from intimidation via menu mainstays such as musky portobello carpaccio with roasted peppers and black mussels with smoked tomatoes. Changes, then, are seasonal rather than permanent, with a softshell crab peeking through here, a dish of truffle macaroni there. In short, Mammano knows how to fix what ain't broke: very, very carefully.

GUILT-FREE DINING

Lo Fat Know Fat Lo Carb Hi Protein Grill

222 Arsenal St., Watertown, 617-923-7676;
340 Cummings Park, Woburn, 781-932-6260;
www.knowfat.com

"We all scream for dairyless soy-based alternative" just doesn't have the right ring. But what about a Red Rampage or a Tropic Tornado? This health-oriented café makes not only smoothies worth shouting about but also salads, sandwiches and entrées that warrant a hoot. Now you can get your day under way with an egg-white, turkey-bacon, and two-cheese breakfast wrap, munch on a chicken-meatball grinder for lunch, feast come dinnertime on honey-basted turkey tips with signature oven-baked "air fries"—and start all over again with a clear conscience tomorrow. A Woburn location just opened in June, and there's an outpost on Route 9 in Shrewsbury if you're driving west.

HOTEL DINING

Meritage

Boston Harbor Hotel, 70 Rowes Wharf, Boston, 617-439-3995, www.meritagetherestaurant.com

Overlooked and underappreciated, this sophisticated hotel dining room serves serious, expertly crafted food by chef Daniel Bruce. The name comes from a superior, limited-production American wine made from a blend of Bordeaux grape varieties—fitting, since Bruce catered the Boston Wine Festival for 15 years, and the restaurant's impressive list runs 32 pages. The interior design radiates urban elegance with spectacular views of Boston Harbor. However, Meritage earns our highest praise for the superb menu, which pairs a selection of 24 tasting plates with an array of appropriate wines. A sparkling white with pan-roasted soft-shelled crab on corn salsa, for example, or an assertive and spicy red to go along with truffled guinea-hen sausage. The elegance and complexity of Bruce's cooking are beyond compare, and the off-the-beaten-path ambience makes this eatery feel like a true find.

ICE CREAM

Cold Stone Creamery

8 Park Plaza, Boston, 617-523-1020; 100 City Square,
Charlestown, 617-242-0100; www.coldstonecreamery.com

Statistically, Bostonians are among the nation's top per capita ice cream consumers, and we've got plenty of excellent local places to choose from. But when this national chain opened in Charlestown this past February (and in Park Square in May), we discovered what the rest of the country was raving about. First, you choose a flavor of ice cream (made in-store daily) from a long list of unusual options like cheesecake and white chocolate. Next come the mix-ins. The first one is free, which shouldn't stop you from picking several more from the astonishing array of candies, sauces, fruits, nuts, etc. Your ingredients are then blended on a refrigerated granite stone—a method credited to the original Steve's in Somerville. The result: sublime creations along the lines of Apple Pie à la Cold Stone—sweet cream ice cream, cinnamon, graham cracker pie crust, apple pie filling and caramel. Cold Stone's smiling servers even make paying for your treat sweet: They've been known to break into song when you tip them.

OLD BOSTON

Locke-Ober

1 Winter Place, Boston, 617-542-1340, www.locke-ober.com

Blood-red furnishings, chandeliers, dapper and discreet bartenders—we sympathize if your first glimpse into this clubby Continental establishment causes flashbacks to the hotel in The Shining. But as you settle in, other details—exquisite carved mahogany, art nouveau glass, gold and silver flourishes, the lush portrait of the nude they call "Yvonne"—will orient you. You're on Boston Brahmin turf. Throughout its 125-plus-year history, and despite several changes in ownership, Locke-Ober has remained a blue-blood bastion. Thanks to current partner Lydia Shire's admirable respect for the institution and its customs, today's VIPs dine much as their predecessors did, on oysters, caviar, lobster and pheasant. But even we commoners can have a taste of the tony life by heading to the bar for, say, a glass of port and a plate of the stellar signature macaroons. After all, all work and no play . . .

INDIAN FOOD

Diva

246 Elm St., Somerville, 617-629-4963, www.divabistro.com

The name refers not to a generic, stuck-up female singer but to a festival light used in India to represent celebration and enlightenment, both of which you'll experience with your first taste of this restaurant's delicious food. Standbys like tandoori, curry and vindaloo are beautifully rendered, and the vegetarian options are legion, while specialties like chicken jalfrezi (made with vegetables, fresh herbs and exotic spices) or lamb tikka saagwala (made with spinach, freshly ground ginger and garlic) are beyond mouthwatering. A bright, beautiful interior with comfy booths and intimate tables overlooks the hipster parade of Davis Square, and both the staff and the presentation are the epitome of subcontinental elegance. Thankfully, the prices are affordable too, because after one meal here, you're likely to become an addict.

INDULGENCE

Dessert in the courtyard at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum's Gardner Café

280 The Fenway, Boston, 617-566-1088, www.isgm.org

If you're going to ingest unnecessary calories, you might as well make it a completely sensory experience and do it in a truly sybaritic setting. The courtyard café at the Gardner Museum offers delicious food in general, but the gorgeous surroundings seem especially appropriate for the decadence of dessert. The bread pudding earns audible moans of ecstasy, with flavors that change seasonally. (In the past year, they've included pumpkin, white chocolate, blueberry and banana, each more sinfully delicious than the last.) Chocoholics will plotz over the chocolate mousse torte (rich chocolate mousse on a dense chocolate base), and coffee cravers will cotton to the mocha cannolis. An additional benefit to the setting: You can walk off some of your indiscretion with a stroll through the museum's magnificent galleries afterward.

IRISH RESTAURANT

James's Gate

5-11 McBride St., Jamaica Plain, 617-983-2000, www.jamessgate.com

We'll refrain from joking that inauthenticity was our foremost criterion. That said, the menu at this Jamaica Plain restaurant and pub, named for Dublin's olde brewery, doesn't exactly linger lovingly upon the Emerald Isle; you can pretty much count the traditional Irish items on your hands, with a couple of fingers left over. Which you can then use to wipe up every last drop of gravy or curry on your plate—because, as it turns out, the bangers and mash, shepherd's pie, and hand-cut chips are exemplary. The word "hearty" comes to mind, without the word "coronary" following right behind it. Meanwhile, the best dishes don't fly flags so much as flavors—try the robust smoked-fish platter, and seasonal offerings like chilled avocado soup. Enjoy them guilt-free: As long as you're also pounding Guinness by the pint, you're in the Irish clear.

ITALIAN

Prezza

24 Fleet St., Boston, 617-227-1577, www.prezza.com

Due to its mountainous locale, the peasants in the small Italian town of Prezza subsisted for centuries almost solely on permutations of pork, polenta and vegetables, and while chef/owner Anthony Caturano's menu isn't nearly that limited, he takes inspiration from the creative-by-necessity culinary sensibility of his ancestors. In fact, his polenta is so primo that even his great-grandma, a Prezza native, would approve. Delicio

Breakfast Sandwiches at Johnny's Luncheonette

30 Langley Road, Newton Center, 617-527-3223; 1106 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-495-0055

After a night of serious drinking, you can pop a couple of aspirin and chug several glasses of water—or you can wake up the next morning and immediately head to Johnny's Luncheonette. Luckily, there are two convenient locations, offering relief to over-imbibers on both sides of the river. Once you're seated (it may take some time), order one of the divine breakfast sandwiches, safe in the knowledge that relief is on the way. The delicate balance of fats and starch from the tasty medley of bread, eggs, cheese and meat is the antidote to last night's poison. Despite its popularity with families, the atmosphere is conducive to the morning after: neither too loud nor too bright. Plus there's excellent coffee and orange juice to rehydrate and recharge your batteries.

dishes like lobster fra diavolo (savory, saffron-infused tagliatelle with shucked lobster, zesty tomato and rosemary) or sweet corn raviolini (with plump rock shrimp, nutty parmigiana, pancetta and white wine) can be ordered either as appetizers or entrées. The pastas are all handmade and perfectly cooked, and specialties like the wood-grilled double-thick pork loin with almond romesco and Tuscan bean salad will have you agonizing over what to order as a secondi. Only the dessert menu, which includes choices like chocolate flourless cake with crème Anglaise and raspberry puree; honey chestnut flan; and a butterscotch crème brulee, isn't authentically Italian. But it's dessert, for God's sake, so who gives a damn?

LATE-NIGHT FOOD

News Restaurant/Lounge

150 Kneeland St., Boston, 617-426-6397,
www.newsboston.com

Now going on two years old, News is still news for a few good reasons. One: In a city that takes "late-night" to mean 12 am, it remains a rarity, unaccompanied in its hours (5 pm–4 am weekdays; 5 pm–5 am weekends) except by a handful of Chinatown haunts. Two: It serves a wide range of good old American fare, from steak tips to sandwiches to pancakes—which, after a wild night of boozing and dancing, might sound rather more soothing than fried eel and cold tea. Three: Comfy couches and booths let you lean back and digest in relative peace. Just don't lean too far back, or the next thing you know, late night will be early morning.

LOBSTER

Jasper White's Summer Shack

149 Alewife Brook Pkwy., Cambridge, 617-520-9500;
50 Dalton St., Boston, 617-867-9955;
www.summershackrestaurant.com

Renowned chef Jasper White is the acknowledged authority on lobster. His eponymous fine-dining restaurant in the North End was famous for its signature lobster preparation (which involved cognac), and he authored the definitive cookbook/manifesto on the subject, entitled Lobster at Home. It's even been said that young crustaceans consider it an honor to be steamed in his pot. Now that he operates these two casual, family-friendly and reasonably priced restaurants (and a third at Connecticut's Mohegan Sun resort), you can enjoy his expertise while wearing jeans and flip-flops. All of his lobster knowledge is reflected in the menu. We actually know several devotees who have tried desperately to bargain for the secret to his outstanding lobster salad. However, our favorite way to enjoy his particular genius is also the simplest: steamed, with drawn butter. We give Jasper White's Summer Shack two enthusiastic claws up.

MARGARITA

Cactus Club

939 Boylston St., Boston, 617-236-0200,
www.bestmargaritas.com

We give up. We hereby forfeit the search for worthy challengers to the supremacy of this Southwestern mainstay in the Back Bay. But wait—before we crown it all-time champ, we'd better head over there and have one more margarita just to make sure. What'll it be: the 1843 Mar that splashes Tequila 1800 with the Spanish vanilla liqueu known as Licor 43? The Sauza Hornitos–based Platinun Marg, tarted up with lemonade? The Tupelo Honey Mar which is indeed drizzled with bee juice? Or a frozen concoc tion in any of 11 wild flavors—kiwi, green apple, black berry, passion fruit? We're dizzy just thinking about the arra of tequilas combined with a secret-recipe sour mix. We' never get them straight unless we carefully try them al Hey, otherwise, what kind of judging panel would we be?

MARTINI

Oak Bar

The Fairmont Copley Plaza, 138 St. James Ave., Boston, 617-267-5300

More than a drink, the martini is a way of life. Doing it jus tice isn't merely a question of mixology; the service and th setting are also key. Which is why this Copley Plaza inst tution simply mustn't be denied. Just settle back in wha may be the city's most breathtakingly rococo interior, wit its high ceilings, dramatic drapery and gold trim, and trea yourself to a classic martini experience. Purists will prefe the Traditionalist, made with Tanqueray, Noilly Pratt ve mouth and a drop of bitters, while vodka buffs will go fo the clean-tasting Presidential or the Chopin. But all wi appreciate the presentation, as the drink is poured table side from an individual glass carafe which is then left be hind in a glass ice bucket so you can polish off the remain der at your leisure. Now that's what we call living.

MEXICAN

Olé Mexican Grill

203-A Broadway, Arlington, 781-643-2299,
www.olearlington.com

Sadly, Mexican food is the redheaded stepchild Boston's ethnic culinary scene, which makes us all th more grateful for and excited about this superb suburba option. Owners Ricardo Ramos and Armida Amor don dumb the food down to suit a timid gringo palate; ever thing is authentic and prepared the traditional way. The molé sauce (a blend of 26 spices and chocolate) is mad from scratch every morning, and dishes like a fabulo chicken enchilada have just the right amount of kic The daily specials really are something special: Olé's or of the only places around Boston to offer authentic chil rellenos (stuffed peppers). You can extinguish the fire wi a refreshing glass of white or red sangria. Be careful not fill up on the made-from-scratch guacamole, which is th best we've had north of Nuevo Laredo. The festive-bu not-kitschy atmosphere is perfect for lunch with frien and a cozy spot for an out-of-the-way date.

MIDDLE EASTERN

Byblos Restaurant

678 Washington St., Norwood, 781-278-0000, www.byblosrestaurant.com

Convenience is a major factor in choosing a restaurant, it takes some damn good food to get us to trek to No wood. Aficionados of Byblos clearly think the cuisine worth the trip—owner Maurice Daaboul estimates that percent of his customers come in from Boston. Daabou wife and sister are in charge of the kitchen, making mean moussaka and producing hummus we'd crawl acr the Sahara for. The lengthy menu makes decisions dif cult, so why not go for a combination plate featuring cl sics like falafel, tabouli, baba ghanoush, kebabs, stuff vine leaves or kibbe. The fattoush is a signature salad wi toasted bread, radish, tomatoes, mint, cucumber and sc lions, and it's impossible to imagine a more refreshing satisfying use of those ingredients. The liberal use of gar makes bringing breath mints advisable, but then aga

NACHOS

The Fours Restaurant and Sports Bar

166 Canal St., Boston, 617-720-4455, www.thefours.com

Truth be told, we never met a nacho we didn't like, but the ones at this North Station pre- and postgame hangout deserve special praise. The Nachos el Grande cover all the basic food groups. Fresh crispy tortilla chips are smothered in melted cheddar cheese, chili, tomatoes, jalapenos, guacamole, sour cream and the restaurant's homemade salsa (we're not sure, but we think it might contain crack). Anyone craving more protein can order the buffalo chicken nachos, which make all of the above beg for mercy under a layer of spicy chicken, scallions, mozzarella and buffalo sauce. We're sure the poor chips have no idea what they're getting themselves into. If you're anything like us, nachos are one of the main reasons to watch football, which makes this one of our favorite places on game day.

NEW CONCEPT

The Butcher Shop

552 Tremont St., Boston, 617-423-4800, www.thebutchershopboston.com

Granted, to the French, the idea may not be so new. But we Bay Staters are enchanted by Barbara Lynch's latest project, a South End butcher shop boasting a built-in wine bar. From the stencilled windows that announce "Foie Gras—Marrow—Lard" to the Twain and Brillat-Savarin quotations chalked on the slate backboard to the lengthy wine list that replaces page numbers with the word "yes," the warmth, good humor and intelligence of the place shine through. No wonder it's been a neighborhood favorite from the moment it opened last fall, with crowds lining the bar or gathered round the butcher block to sip Provençal rosés and Piedmontese reds, nibble all kinds of weekly-changing housemade charcuterie (terrines, cold cuts, you name it) and simply while the evenings away.

NEW RESTAURANT

Restaurant L

Louis Boston, 234 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-266-4680, www.louisboston.com

The reverse snob in you resists. The boutique setting is so exclusive, the minimalist decor so sleek, the clientele so designer-chic, that you want to stomp your feet—preferably in scuffed motorcycle boots—and cry, "You can't fool me!" Only this Asian-influenced, New World eatery isn't fooling around one bit. It's ultimately a gorgeous forum for executive chef Pino Maffeo to air his vision of cuisine as an art, one that overlaps with sculpture, with architecture, with theater—comedy as well as drama. For Maffeo, bamboo steamers make good bread baskets, and test tubes become serving implements—a metaphor duly noted, as the menu disseminates new elements while combining volatile ones: smoked trout with grains of paradise glass, for instance, or ravioli stuffed with ricotta and dandelion greens. Take the experience to another level with an exotic elixir—the Sardinian myrtle liqueur is a knockout.

OENOPHILE'S TREASURE

Troquet

140 Boylston St., Boston, 617-695-9463

On the edge of the Theater District, Troquet surprises quietly with an outstanding menu and a wine selection worthy of the best cellar. Ordering an appetizer and an entrée with appropriate wines can be intimidating for the novice, but Troquet eliminates the confusion from the equation by pairing each item on its menu with a complementary vintage. To make matters even easier, the layout places appetizers on the left and entrées on the right, with wines in the middle. Start with spring pea soup garnished with Pekeytoe crab, and go on to East Coast halibut garnished with baby artichokes, with a fruity, white tasting trip to Spain and France in between. If you order a flight, each course arrives with three to five 2-ounce sips, grouped by country or varietal. The newly renovated downstairs has a wine bar that also serves savory snack food to quell pretheater stomach grumbling. After the show, pick up where you left off: The bar menu is available until midnight. With 600 wines by the bottle and 47 by the glass, it's a wine lover's wet dream.

OLD FAITHFUL

647 Tremont St., Boston, 617-266-4600, www.tremont647.com

Thriving on buzz as the industry does, eight years is like a century in the life of a restaurant. In the trendy South End, it may well be an eternity. This "Adventurous American" café owes its survival to husband-and-wife owners Andy and Gretchen Husbands and their young-blood crew, who keep the energy high and the edge keen. From the beloved Momos (pork dumplings with soy-sake sauce) to the infamous Tremont Tang (papaya-infused vodka, pineapple juice and 7-Up in a glass rimmed with the astronaut's drink), from the popular pajama brunch to closing-time cocktails al fresco, the idiosyncratic yet laid-back vibe of the place makes instant regulars of newcomers—and makes regulars feel like new. Here's to the next eight years.

OLD-WORLD ITALIAN CAFÉ

Caffe dello Sport

308 Hanover St., Boston, 617-523-5063

Zip the English-speaking lips, and you'd never know this Hanover hangout wasn't in the heart of some crumbling piazza in Rome. It's all there: the tiny, wobbly tables, the spot-on cups of espresso and mugs of cappuccino, the half-attentive but affable staff, the shelves of liquor behind the bar for elderly signori in need of a caffè corretto—"coffee the right way," with a shot of Sambuca or grappa—as well as the late-hour limoncello hounds. And this has long been the place to catch an international soccer match, as hordes of neighborhood fans gather around the big screen in back to cheer on the home team. But in the end, it's simply an ideal spot to sit and watch il mondo go by.

OVERALL VALUE

Dêdo Lounge & Bistro

69 Church St., Boston, 617-338-9999, www.dedo.biz

It's named for the unusually benign gargoyle that serves as an unofficial mascot for Paris' Ile de la Cité—a fitting symbol for this fledgling neighborhood fixture. On the border between the Theater District and the South End, Dêdo aims to offer the best of all worlds—efficiency for showgoers, laid-back leisure for regulars, bar bites for grazers, creative cuisine for gourmets—all in a space that's just attractive enough: inviting, but not distractingly bedecked. And darned if it doesn't succeed. Fried clams and a pancetta-and-pea-speckled mac and cheese prove every bit as luxuriant as ricotta gnocchi with Sweet 100 tomatoes and homemade chocolate assortments. Yet the prices are modest beyond expectation: Even the wine list is a bargain, with selections by the glass about half what you'd anticipate. Seems this Dêdo really is looking out for its patrons.

On Sunday mornings, which are normally reserved for communing with your pillow and comforter, we can't think of a more compelling reason to toss the sheets aside and go have brunch. You'll never look at this breakf basic the same way again after a taste of Stephani gourmet griddle cakes. Three flapjacks the size of dinn plates arrive with a scoop of cinnamon-scented but seeping into the fluffy warmth, topped by maple syr that tastes like it was just tapped from the tree, an shake of powdered sugar. If fruit's your weakness, or the blueberry or banana version. In a restaurant that la in the day caters to Newbury Street shoppers refueli between boutiques, breakfast is the most relaxing time revel in Stephanie's cushy ambience. Let Aunt Jemi and Mrs. Butterworth sleep in, and come here instead.

So you too harbor doubts about thin crusts; you too t one listless, seemingly yeastless bite and cry out, "Sir when was pizza the stuff of desert nomads? Let my p dough!" This pair of gourmet pizzerias answers y prayers with a crust that's crispy but not brittle; gol olive-oily rather than bone dry. And it holds up re- kably well under specialty toppings that are actually ptial. The cheese is no generic salty glue but a rich zarella garnished with asiago; the pesto packs a nutty- icky punch; and departures from the pedestrian norm arugula, jalapeños, portobellos, sun-dried tomatoes sweet baby clams and shrimp keep your taste buds on r, um, toes. The resulting pie is an urbanite's manna.

It was when current owner Jim Caffarelli partnered with an overcommitted Todd English and opened this Faneuil Hall trattoria that critics first began to say "basta," and their hopes for the place were hardly lifted when English backed out of the venture. Enter Bill Bradley. If anyone could turn the restaurant's prospects from gloomy to golden, it would be the easygoing ex-Bricco chef. And turn them he has. Always an attractive spot despite the Disneyesque environs—the glassed-in space, with its stone-worked pizza oven, pasta-drying racks and overhead fans, evokes a Tuscan villa—Rustic Kitchen now turns out its own special brand of Italian comfort cuisine rather than warmed-over Figs fare. Handmade agnolotti and trofie, spiedini, and gourmet pizza (like the portobello mushroom with goat cheese and caramelized onions) all demonstrate Bradley's North Coun-

SPECIALTY FOODS

Savenor's

160 Charles St., Boston 617-723-6328

Ever wonder where restaurants like Radius, Aquitaine and UpStairs on the Square get their hands on exotic ingredients like quail eggs or buffalo meat? Since 1939 this retail resource for gourmands and gastronomes has stocked its shelves with items that leave hardcore foodies whimpering with excitement. (It's been at the Charles Street location for 12 years.) Following in the footsteps of his late father, Jack Savenor (the shop's founder), owner Ron Savenor relies on strong relationships with suppliers of rare and hard-to-find foods, from fresh produce to Indian chutneys to organic ketchup. The meat case is a lesson in acquired tastes from alligator to zebra, including ostrich fillets, ground yak patties, wild boar, baby back ribs, ground kangaroo, rattlesnake and mountain lion. If you're passionate about pate, there are more than 25 kinds to choose from. In short, if you can cook it and eat it, you can probably find it here.

OUTDOOR DINING

Oleana

134 Hampshire St., Cambridge, 617-661-0505, www.oleanarestaurant.com

In Boston, there are patios, and then there are patios. Regarding the former, well, all you can say is they're definitely outdoors; whether that's actually a plus depends on street traffic, foot traffic, pollution, noise pollution, etc. To judge the latter, though, you'll have to leave the city proper and wander over to, oh, how about Oleana? OK, you caught us—we led you here deliberately. We know full well that the Eastern-Mediterranean eatery boasts no mere terrace but a whole backyard; we know it's shaded by trees and vines, perfumed by herbs from the kitchen garden and heated by lamps on cooler evenings. Above all, we know it's the ideal setting for Ana Sortun's intriguingly spiced, ever-refreshing repertoire—which we would, admittedly, lick off the sidewalk on a sleety winter's night if we had to. So perhaps we're not the best folks to ask about al fresco luxury.

try know-how. Finally, foodies are daring to show their faces in Faneuil Hall, as well as in Cambridge's Porter Exchange, where a similarly modeled and menued Rustic Kitchen opened in July (a Hingham location opens in the fall).

POWER BREAKFAST

The Bristol Lounge

The Four Seasons Hotel, 200 Boylston St., Boston, 617-351-2053, www.fourseasons.com

In business, all the important stuff happens before 10 am, and in Boston, a lot of it goes down at the Four Seasons. The recently refurbished Bristol is one of the swankiest dining rooms in the city, with comfy sofas and well-spaced tables giving it a level of privacy and luxury that makes it a favorite spot for the city's high and mighty. Breakfasting on lavish choices like lemon-ricotta hotcakes and rum-glazed banana French toast makes tough mergers go down easier, and alternative "power breakfasts" (like the cholesterol-free egg frittata and the multigrain pancakes) deliver great taste and less waist. The exquisite view of the Public Garden offers a welcome distraction during contentious negotiations, and enjoying it in the morning instead of cocktails means there's less chance of blurting out something job—or deal—endangering.

POWER LUNCH

Abe and Louie's

793 Boylston St., Boston, 617-536-6300, www.abeandlouies.com

Shake hands over Caesar salads and seal the deal with swordfish or sirloin au poivre. The gracious waitstaff inconspicuously looks after your every need, refilling water glasses or wine goblets and delivering your meal without interrupting the creative brainstorm taking place at your table. From Atkins-friendly entrées to signature salads for the calorie counters, there's something to appeal to every appetite, and the sedate surroundings offer a perfect place to debrief or destress after that marathon conference call. If you're flexing your expense account, there's Champagne, and if you're trying to save your client some money, there's a turkey club. Floor-to-ceiling windows flood the room with light and provide a cool breeze in fair weather. No wonder it's so in with the French-cuff crowd.

PRETHEATER DINING

Teatro

177 Tremont St., Boston, 617-778-6841, www.teatroboston.com

Drama. It defines the dining experience at this Theater District ristorante. First, there's that dreamy setting: a gold-etched, arched ceiling; soft blue lights; marble walls and the bright, open kitchen standing like a stage at the end of the narrow room. There's the cast: scads of fabulous, fashion-forward folk making the most of the echo chamber-like acoustics. There's the plot twist: It turns out this place was once a synagogue! And then there's the climax: a superb Italian menu featuring gorgeous antipasti, luscious homemade pastas (like the rich rigatoni classic ragout bolognese), tender lamb and veal and a reasonably priced wine list. But in this culinary theater, guess who stays behind the scenes, for once? Why, it's the waitstaff, whose pleasant efficiency even during the dinner rush gets our kudos whether we're holding show tickets or not. Bravo!

PRIX FIXE DINING

Craigie Street Bistrot

5 Craigie Circle, Cambridge, 617-497-5511, www.craigiestreetbistrot.com

Sure, there are more ostentatious options out there—what you want most is to impress your moneyed p with caviar degustations. But if you crave creativi craft and value as much as indulgence, this vrai-bi bistro outside Harvard Square is the go-to spot for spired multicourse menus. Take the "Curtain for C tain" prix fixe aimed at ART ticketholders, which off three courses from the daily à la carte menu, thoug fully chosen by the chef for maximum expediency; the "Neighborhood Menu," which, at $30, does same for bargain-hunters. Or the Sunday night "Ch Choice," a four-course feast created on the spot by c Tony Maws. We're talking delectable dishes like coq lage of shellfish with paprika oil, red-chile hangar st with "forked" potatoes, and beignets with crème-frâi ice cream. So leave the Joneses at home—save this s for your food-savvy friends.

eatery. A native of Southie, Lynch has a down-to-earth sensibility that's evident in the eye-catching but laid-back decor. One of our favorite aspects is the long bar that dominates the room and serves as a place for solo diners to enjoy the lively scene. The large, open kitchen offers both a cooking lesson and entertainment as you eat, and the straightforward oyster list changes twice daily, for lunch and dinner. (Recent faves are Katamas from Martha's Vineyard and Bras d'Ors from Nova Scotia.) Delicious cooked options on the seasonally changing regular menu abound for those not fond of the raw stuff. But for those who are, it doesn't get any better than this.

RESTAURANT REINCARNATION

Blackfin Chop House & Raw Bar

116 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-247-2400; 1217 Main St., Hingham, 781-740-4000;
www.blackfinchophouse.com

A decade has passed since Ambrosia on Huntington opened to kudos fueled by controversy; in a town still clinging to culinary provincialism, Anthony Ambrose's flair for flamboyant fusion set tongues a-wagging in more ways than one. Since then, Bostonians' tastes have matured enough to allow carte blanche for the avant-garde, so Ambrose has gone and turned Ambrosia into…a surf 'n' turf joint? Indeed, Blackfin may prove his most radical move yet—precisely because it embraces a retrograde trend already established in the Back Bay. The once uncompromisingly posh interior now makes room for sparkling fresh-fish displays; the once dauntingly new-fangled menu now hinges on the simple elegance of beef and seafood, from carpaccio and sashimi to lobster and filet mignon. Would Ambrose really risk his reputation on the value of nuance over novelty? Now that is innovative.

ROMANTIC RESTAURANT

Icarus

3 Appleton St., Boston, 617-426-1790, www.icarusrestaurant.com

Hushed, softly lit and intimate, this legendary South End dining room is located below street level and decorated with thick carpeting, lushly upholstered chairs, and tables set for two. A small bar area is perfect for sharing a plate of seared foie gras and a glass of wine, but the handful of comfortable bar stools imply a temporary layover before moving on to the dining room. Here, the glow from small sconces sets the appropriate mood. Icarus has a padded ceiling that absorbs hushed conversations meant for only two sets of ears, and a beautiful statue of the restaurant's mythological and romantic namesake surveys diners as they savor truly exquisite food (and, on Friday nights, live jazz). The menu is brief but dazzling: Wild king salmon arrives bathed in maltaise sauce, and soft-shell crabs tussle with garlic crostini on a bed of arugula with chipotle aioli. Grilled shrimp with mango and jalapeño sorbet offers a sensual bit of sweet and spice, and a molten chocolate soufflé cake for two delivers the coup de grâce. If we had to rename this place, we'd call it Love Potion No. 9.

SALADS

blu

The Sports Club/LA, 4 Avery St., Boston, 617-375-8550, www.blurestaurant.com

Many members of the city's toniest gym have been known to rely on its upscale restaurant (or the casual café) for all three meals of the day, and it's easy to see why. The healthful but satisfying salads, in particular, earn our unequivocal praise. In the dining room, the best Cobb salad we've ever tasted is served in a rectilinear presentation that emphasizes each of its unbelievably fresh, delicious ingredients. Out in the café, a spinach salad is piled high with baby greens, accented with grilled red onions, crumbled bacon and candied walnuts, and drizzled with a warm bacon vinaigrette. The formal dining room's cremini and zucchini salad is another favorite. In this simple, refreshing dish, shaved cremini mushrooms and zucchini are mixed with arugula, capers and Parmigiano Reggiano in a light olive oil and lemon dressing. Eating smart doesn't have to mean eating bland, and the well-balanced and beautifully executed options at blu make it easy to get your daily allowance of green.

DIM SUM

Chau Chow City

88 Essex St., Boston, 617-338-8158

Every few weeks, the desire for something exotic overtakes us at breakfast or brunch time and we head to Chinatown for a dim sum fix. This spacious, three-story restaurant (it seats more than 600) rarely, if ever, has a wait for a table, and the number of Chinese families enjoying themselves is a good sign that the food is both authentic and delicious. The dim sum selection available from the passing carts is so big that it would take numerous visits to sample them all, and while a few items (like boiled beef tripe) are best suited for more adventurous palates, the majority are appetizing even to the most finicky eaters. They're healthful, too—many dishes are steamed and feature fresh seafood and fragrant rice. Those overpriced brunch buffets with chafing dishes of questionable casseroles can't hold a Chinese lantern to the Asian equivalent of tapas, and you can probably cover the cost if you collect the change hiding in your sofa cushions.

SANDWICHES

Parish Cafe

361 Boylston St., Boston, 617-247-4777,
www.parishcafe.com

It's not hard to make a sandwich, but it's something else entirely to make a take-your-breath-away, drool-inducing, never-want-anything-else-for-lunch sandwich. The Parish knows just how to do that. The menu features inspired creations from some of Boston's best chefs. One example is the Benny, designed by Ken Oringer of Clio: Vietnamese grilled chicken breast on a crusty baguette with assorted vegetables and a mint-and-coriander mayonnaise. A spicy purple cabbage slaw tossed with tomatoes, fresh mint, Thai basil and cracked peanuts comes on the side. Other favorites include the Blue Ginger, created by Ming Tsai—a rare tuna steak with teriyaki glaze and wasabi aioli. Lydia Shire's Steak and Blue (tenderloin on blue cheese bread) is equally enticing. This is the sandwich as an art form, and the relaxed but upscale atmosphere and lively but unpretentious bar scene offer an excellent place to indulge your inner Dagwood.

STEAKHOUSE

Grill 23 & Bar

161 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-542-2255, www.grill23.com

In the pantheon of Boston steakhouses (and we can boast an extensive one), Grill 23 deserves to be thought of as Zeus or Apollo. It's not just the superior beef and the superb service (and it's even despite the dull roar of the loud dining room); in our countless visits, we've never had a bad meal there, whether we were indulging our carnivorous side with Kobe Bel del Monaco or the finest lamb chops in town, or toning it down a bit with the smoked organic Scottish salmon or the herb-crusted rare tuna. Appetizers like glimmering oysters and shrimp as big as the Ritz are mere foreplay for by-the-book classics consistently and flawlessly prepared. We're always up for trying a new hot spot, but we inevitably end up back here. It's one of the few restaurants where we can always say the meal was worth the hefty price tag.

STEAK TIPS

The Paramount

44 Charles St., Boston, 617-720-1152,
www.paramountboston.com

If these are just the tips, we'd sure love to see the whole iceberg! This long-lived Beacon Hill café has taken a down-home cookout classic and injected it with big-city cheekiness. It's above all a matter of size. More like mini-sirloins than the typical two-bite odds-and-ends, the Paramount's tips are plenty thick and juicy, with a clean, understated barbecue tang. But it's also about the big picture, as they're topped with glistening browned onions and strewn around a mound of mashed spuds—red bliss, which have a homey, fluffy texture—to create a plate worthy of any roadside diner or old-school chophouse.

District, but the inside is like that place you remember from childhood along Route 6, and if you order the steamers, what arrives is a bucket of tender, nutty, salty goodness. (The rest of the seafood, including the lobster, is just as delicious.) As for the sand, there might be a tiny bit. Just swirl the clam in broth to clean it, dip it in drawn butter and enjoy the essence of a New England summer. Sunburn not included.

SUBURBAN RESTAURANT

Blue Ginger

583 Washington St., Wellesley, 781-283-5790, www.ming.com

Far from the downtown crowds, amid the genteel tweeness of Wellesley Center, is the restaurant that played a key role in Ming Tsai's ascent into national culinary superstardom. Unlike the case with many celebrity chefs, though, you actually stand as much chance of seeing Tsai's smiling mug in his restaurant as in the pages of Food and Wine, Gourmet or Bon Appétit. He's still the consummate restaurateur, overseeing every detail in the kitchen and greeting and charming patrons in the dining room. His restaurant's simple and sensible union of American and Asian cuisine is also the key to the success of his WGBH-TV show, Simply Ming. The foie gras–shiitake shumai, for example, is the tastiest little bundle of flavor this side of the Yangtze. The sake-miso marinated butterfish with wasabi oil, soy syrup and vegetarian soba noodle sushi is equally mouthwatering. The trip out to Wellesley may be a bit of a schlep, and the prices might be on the extravagant side, but a meal by Ming the Magnificent is worth it.

SUSHI

Oishii Sushi Bar/Oishii Too

612 Hammond St., Chestnut Hill, 617-277-7888;
Mill Village, 365 Boston Post Road, Sudbury, 978-440-8300

Occasionally, in the course of a discussion about sushi in the Boston area, you'll hear someone bring up some other place—Oga's Japanese Cuisine, perhaps, or Uni. But only as a devil's advocate; only for the sake of argument. Because when you come right down to it, no other sushi bar comes close to matching the quality, generosity and creativity of this tiny suburban establishment and its equally tiny, even more suburban sibling. If sushi-grade fish actually received grades, Oishii's would graduate summa cum laude—it's that fresh and flavorful. The cuts are laudably large. The spicy scallop maki is literally lip-smacking. The red clam nigiri is impossibly tender. And as for the fatty tuna maki: mmmmmmmooooohhhhhhhhhhishii. Enough said.

BAKERY, BREADS

Hi-Rise Bread Co.

56 Brattle St., Cambridge, 617-492-3003;
208 Concord Ave., Cambridge, 617-876-8766

We'll see your display of raw, bloody cuts of meat and raise you a row of bread loaves, warm and fresh from the oven. We're that willing to wager that a wholesome diet begins at the baker's, not the butcher's. Especially if said baker is Rene Becker, whose Harvard Square outpost has indeed risen over the years to the top of many a local best list, be it for sandwiches, pastries or, of course, bread itself. From the many shades of wheat (the signature seeded whole-grain, the Huron, with wheatberries, the rye-enhanced Polka) and the rich, eggy, loaves (challah brioche) to the fruit-studded sweet varieties (raisin-pecan, Polish babka) and the fun surprises (rosemary-flecked, focaccia-like fougasse, and dense, moist, traditionally prepared brown bread), these carbs beat your average protein slab hands-down. No wonder another word for riches is "dough."

TAPAS

Dali Restaurant & Tapas Bar

415 Washington St., Somerville, 617-661-3254, www.dalirestaurant.com

Despite the proliferation of mom-and-pop eateries specializing in small bites and the misguided trend of calling everything from a hamburger to cotton candy "tapas," there remains one stunningly authentic and consistent Spanish restaurant that knows what the word actually means. Each dish is small in size but enormous in flavor, and choices range from baby lamb chops to baked goat cheese, with unusual items like braised rabbit and stuffed squid in between. The genius of eating smaller portions is the flexibility: You can enjoy a satisfying meal whether you're as hungry as a field hand or just in the mood for a light, late-night nosh. Sangria is the unofficial house beverage, but the beer menu is worth a glance, as is the wine list, which includes only Spanish vintages. The prices are well within the reality range, and because there's nothing sexier than nibbling off the same plate, it's also one of our top spots for a date that you hope will last until morning.

THAI

Khao Sarn Cuisine

250 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-566-7200, www.khaosarn.com

It's a far cry the from the numerous look-alike, sound-alike, taste-alike storefront Thai restaurants in town. For one thing, this Coolidge Corner eatery actually boas some ambience, with mood lighting, tablecloths and bar that makes a mean cocktail to boot. For another, i contrast to the questionable name (it translates as "r rice"), the menu has wide-ranging appeal, offering migh fine versions of all the usual suspects, like pad Thai an choo chee, while really going to town with such unusu northern Thailand specialties as miang kum—a crunch salty-sweet mixture of dried shrimp and coconut, roaste peanuts, lime, and more atop fresh spinach leaves—an moo pa lo (rich braised pork stew). And rest assured—th rice here really is cooked.

People spew so much nonsense about French food whe the best of it is actually quite simple. Owner and exec tive chef Seth Woods cuts through all the malarkey b offering a limited menu of expertly executed signatu dishes. The frisée and lardon salade, with aged chevr sherry vinaigrette, poached egg and croutons; and sou à l'oignon, traditional onion soup, epitomize the uncon plicated genius of French bistro fare. Entrées inclu scallop vol-au-vent (a chicken pot pie–style dish) and melt-in-your-mouth lemon sole meuniére. Make su someone at your table orders the steak frites—so del cious you'll think twice about using ketchup. With a ne Saturday prix fixe brunch menu ($9.95 for thr courses), you can savor the flavor of Paris for less than costs to park at the Prudential and still get home in tim for an afternoon nap.

Just because you look like a Neanderthal while eati them doesn't mean they can't be delicious, and this o erwise unremarkable Newton Corner pub produ wings that exceed the highest expectations. The sa is a secret, but one regular we know swears it's delive daily from heaven, which explains why some peo drive all the way from downtown to Exit 17 off Mass. Owner Judy Rosenberg went to the Museum School to study color and design, but her true art lies in making the most guilt-inducing and addictive brownies known to mankind. In addition to classics like brownies with chocolate chips or walnuts, you can choose between Boom Booms (chewy chocolate–cream cheese swirl brownies), Congo bars (butterscotch brownies with walnuts and chocolate chips) and the naughtily decadent Chocolate Orgasms (chocolate brownies with dark fudge frosting). Choco-phobes can steer toward Rosie's delicious blondies—butterscotch brownies with the chewy consistency of fudge ones. Your thighs won't thank you, but your taste buds will. ⊷

BIRTHDAY CAKES

Party Favors

www.partyfavorsbrookline.com

We know people who drive all the way from New Hampshire to buy birthday cakes at Party Favors, and one taste is all it takes to see why. Made on the premises by expert bakers (they assure us no elves are involved), the confections range from colorful individual cupcakes to giant masterpieces that can feed the masses. As you vie with the crowd to get a glimpse of the display cases, browse through the staggering selection of party favors, decorations, wrapping paper, cards and confetti. The cakes and trappings at Party Favors would make even the Mad Hatter wish every day were his birthday.

PASTRIES

Mike's Pastry

300 Hanover St., Boston, 617-742-3050, www.mikespastry.com

The line outside this North End purveyor of all things sweet doesn't pique your interest, the sight and smell of the pastries inside will. Every bit of scrumptiousness on display is baked fresh daily on the premises from recipes that owner and namesake Mike Mercogliano has honed over the past 60 years. Here's hoping that he keeps baking for another 60. We're not sure life is worth living without his handiwork.

"Make life sweeter…eat dessert first!" It's the golden rule at this South End bakery, and woe to the customer who disobeys. No, you won't get grounded like you did when you fed mom's meatloaf to the dog—it's just that if you've filled up on chef/owner Joanne Chang's (admittedly delicious) savory goods, you won't have much room for her sticky buns, tender banana bread, spice cake, raspberry crumb bars or our favorite: cheeky homemade, Oreo-style sandwich cook-

AFTER-WORK COCKTAILS

Peking Tom's Longtang Lounge

25 Kingston St., Boston, 617-482-6282,
www.pekingtom.com

Looking for a place to tie one on once the tie comes off? Look no further than this super-hip downtown hangout, where the straight-laced can order a martini while the more adventurous can self-medicate with such pseudo-Sino concoctions as a Zombie or Mai Tai. After 5, the pin-striped crowd snacks on wasabi peas and delicious crab Rangoon, often opting to stay for dinner (the reasonably priced, delicious food is a cut above your typical dragon palace fare). Between the location and the faraway vibe (e.g., an endless audio loop of "Learn to Speak Chinese" playing in the bathrooms), it's the ideal spot to recover from a bad day at work. As soon as you walk through the door, you can go from being a suffering bastard to sipping one.

AL FRESCO COCKTAILS

Tia's

200 Atlantic Ave., Boston, 617-227-0828,
www.tiaswaterfront.com

A sure sign of summer in Boston is when the giant red claws appear on the red brick wall of Tia's, clutching a banner advertising an $18.95 lobster dinner, but the real deal is the tropical cocktails and cold Coronas that flow freely once the patio opens. Newly acquired tans and sweating glasses mark the dog days of summer at this prime waterfront watering hole. On sultry nights, a line forms early, so come directly from the office for an after-work nip or wedge yourself into the crowd after dinner in the outdoor dining area. With only four months of warm weather, Bostonians take full advantage of the opportunity to show some skin, making Tia's a great place for eye candy. A little slice of Margaritaville, right here in Beantown.

AUDIBLE/EDIBLE COMBO

Matt Murphy's

14 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-232-0188,
www.mattmurphyspub.com

It's not often that you hear someone raving about pub grub, but regulars at this suburban standout swear the food's as good as at restaurants twice as pricey. Like the hearty regular menu, the seasonal items are stellar (think braised lamb when winter is rattling your bones, or delicately grilled seafood on a sweltering August night). The music, meanwhile, is slamming. Live acts run the gamut from soulful troubadours to earthy jazz bands and out-and-out rockers. If music be the food of love and the way to a man's heart is through his stomach, every day is Valentine's Day at Matt Murphy's.

BEER BAR

Sunset Grill & Tap

130 Brighton Ave., Allston, 617-254-1331

Even if you downed a different type of beer there every day for a year, you'd still have a ways to go to get through Sunset's staggering selection of about 400 microbrews and 100 taps. The bar, open 365 days a year, boasts vintage and cask ales, meads, lagers and lambics—enough beers to boggle the brain of even the biggest brewski aficionado. Now Sunset's glassware selection is almost as varied as its beer menu: In a move to optimize the flavor and nuances of different beers, Sunset serves up its stuff in glasses specially recommended by brewers. (FYI: Belgian ales go best in a snifter or tulip.) How to decide which beer to drink? Try a few 2-ounce "pours" before committing to a full glass. And there's one more way to make the most of Sunset's near-infinite alcohol array: Go back, again and again.

BEGINNING OF A NEW ERA

Brother Jimmy's Barbecue

96 Winthrop St., Cambridge, 617-547-7427, www.brotherjimmys.com

The House of Blues is gone. In its place is this southern-food haven, where the bar scene's as sizzling as the St. Louis–style ribs. Since opening in mid November, this satellite of a successful New York hot spot has been full nearly every night with a casual Harvard Square crowd that comes to mix, mingle and tie on the feedbag. The ideal place to go when some of your group want to eat and some don't but no one wants to spend a bundle. It's low-key and upbeat, and if anything can fill the shoes of the dearly departed music club, we're willing to bet it's this place.

BEST-KEPT SECRET

Cornwall's

654 Beacon St., Boston, 617-262-3749

It's been there forever, and yet nobody seems to know about it or remember to go there. In a city overrun by Irish pubs, this English equivalent (in feeling, if not decor) offers a chummy, simpatico spot to meet up with friends who haven't moved to the South End or Beacon Hill and are happily holding out in the outskirts of Boston. Board games, pool tables and five TVs offer ample entertainment. Affordable drinks and a Kenmore Square location add to its oddball charm. The sort of place where you could while away a Sunday afternoon without feeling like a total degenerate.

CHEAP-BEER BAR

Beacon Hill Pub

149 Charles St., Boston, 617-523-1895

Not-quite-clean floors, crowds of sweaty twenty- and thirtysomethings fresh from the State House, Pabst for $2: not exactly what you'd expect to find in an establishment on elegant, upscale Charles Street. But luckily for those whose wallets are as thin as their tolerance for pretense, there sits the Beacon Hill Pub. Alcohol aficionados lacking the funds to match their fervor frequent the bar, lured like moths to a flame by its inventory of everything from $3 Michelob Ultra to $3.75 Sam Adams. The atmosphere is an aberration amid the pub's ritzy environs, but fans of beer and bargains don't care. Neither does the bar's management: According to them, the Beacon Hill Pub is a dive—and proud of it.

CIVILIZED NIGHTCAP

Bar 10

The Westin Hotel, 10 Huntington Ave., Boston,
617-424-7446

Despite the revival of martinis and tiki lounges, one aspect of cocktail culture that's largely gone by the wayside is the civilized goodnight pop. Thankfully, this hotel bar (in the Westin, no less!) still remembers how it's done. The Bar 10-ders (sorry) mix cr ative cocktails, including a mojito martini, f canoodling couples. You and your squeeze can eve order Cocktails for Two: a pitcher of your favorite l bation and two glasses for gazing into each other eyes. For anyone looking to escape the rowdiness other bar scenes, this place is an oasis. Both the se ting and the crowd maintain a level of sophisticatio that's hard to find after midnight.

If Andy, Bianca, Halston and the rest of the old St dio 54 crowd were looking to boogie in Boston, this where they'd go. The hottest DJs come to spin, t slammin'est touring musical acts come to play and t beautiful people come to dance. There are cages ar stages, and pages of little black books get furious filled. Despite many changes over the years, this ca ernous disco inferno continues to crank, and if a nig out dancing is what you crave, it never disappoints.

DANCE CLUB, SATURDAY

With this decked-out, multilevel dance club in the pi ture, Bostonians have no excuse to stay in on a Satu day night. The Roxy is the young-exec crowd's Satu day hot spot for shedding suits and ties, letting off sor steam and breaking a sweat on the 1,200-square-fo dance floor. DJs spin nonstop house and top-40, en gizing clubgoers and encouraging them to leave t workweek (and their inhibitions) behind. Aside fr the staple of hot bodies gyrating to DJ Adilson's bea Saturday night is known for its rotating themes. In t past, the Roxy party-planners have transformed t club into Times Square, a wrestling ring, and this y every Saturday night through the summer, a bea party. Break out your bikini (summer attire is enco aged through Labor Day), slurp a Sex on the Bea from the bar and party on.

DIVE BAR

The Tam

222 Tremont St., Boston

If you find yourself all dressed up with no place to don't go here. Despite its location in the heart of t Theater District, the Tam is a bar with no frills, pretenses—and certainly no tuxedos and eveni gowns. T-shirt-and-jeans-clad regulars love this dov and-dirty bar for its pretension-free atmosphere, cheap brewskis and its surprisingly eclectic jukeb (which spins everything from the Doors and Dylan Pink and Moby). There are also three TVs and a sm arcade, but everyone knows the real entertainm comes from conversing with the gruff but amiable b tender and the other grizzled patrons. Whether it's noon or 12 midnight, it's guaranteed a few Tam ve ans will be warming the scuffed-up bar stools or sta ing by the penny-covered tabletops, nursing a $2 dr Adding to the sketch factor is the fact that the T won't give out its phone number—and it's unlisted

EMBODIMENT OF A SCENE FROM SEX AND THE CITY

Excelsior

www.excelsiorrestaurant.com

Perhaps it's not coincidental that "excel" is in its name, since this seriously gorgeous bar and restaurant exceeds all expectations. A magnet for visiting celebrities (recent confirmed sightings have included Christina Aguilera and Mark Wahlberg), it was designed by visionary architect Adam Tihany, who used Jerusalem limestone floors and a three-story glass wine tower with a 7,000-bottle capacity to create the memorable interior. Co-owner, celebrity chef and local treasure Lydia Shire contributed some decorative glass pieces from her personal collection to display behind the bar, and the drinks themselves are no less inspired. Signature cocktails include the Executive Blues—a vodka martini with a blueberry puree—and the Bajito—which combines basil and mint for a refreshing update of an old favorite. Needless to say, the food is flawless too, but if you're just out to tipple, a swankier setting is impossible to imagine.

HIPSTER HANGOUT

All Asia Bar

334 Mass. Ave, Cambridge, 617-497-1544, www.allasiabar.com

Three dead giveaways that someone is a hipster: piercings in body parts other than ears, at least one accessory decorated with grommets, and a low-slung waistline gyrating to live music. All three are in evidence at this Cambridge hangout, where eclectic music is the draw and the neighborhood feel is pure Central Square boho. Someone's on stage seven nights a week, and depending on which night you stroll in, you'll hear reggae, indie rock, jazz, blues, soul or even a cappella (which, in this setting, somehow acquires an unironic hipness). The drinks are as cheap as they get inside Route 128. Cover charges vary and are usually very reasonable—a small price to pay for stepping in and instantly upping your cool quotient.

HOTEL BAR

City Bar in the Lenox Hotel

710 Boylston St., Boston, 617-536-5300

Understated elegance meets contemporary glamour in this dimly lit alcove tucked into the traditional chintz decor of the Lenox's lobby. The back-lit bar provides the room's focal point, while seating at low-slung tables and mahogany leather sofas offers an out-of-the-way nook to meet a blind date or a comfortable place to lounge with the regular suspects. The clientele ranges from busy downtown worker bees to Waspy women clutching Saks Fifth Avenue shopping bags, and the sophisticated cocktail menu goes way beyond the tired Stoli Doli to include such specialties as a selection of infused rums and bourbons. A light, tantalizing bar menu is perfect for suggestive nibbling, but the renowned Azure is only a few feet away once your appetite is whetted.

best is like taking our lives into our own hands—people feel strongly about the subject. This shaggy dog of a place has worn wood and comfortable seating: red leather booths and ladder-back chairs in which to sip a Guinness or sample such old-country fare as shepherd's pie. Only the stoutest of heart could polish off the Traditional Irish Mixed Grill: an artery-clogging combination of marinated Guinness steak tips, Irish sausages, Irish bacon, baked beans and French fries (after all, what's an Irish meal without potatoes?). Once the atmospheric whining of fiddles and bagpipes over the sound system fades, live bands take over. All the while, the smiling Irishmen in the black-and-white photos on the walls seem to be beaming their approval.

LESBIAN NIGHT OUT
Toast

70 Union Square, Somerville, 617-623-9211, www.toastlounge.com

It's easy to figure out where the boys are, but for some unknown reason, sisters of Sappho have fewer nightlife options in Boston. Toast helps to alleviate this sad state of affairs with its Lesbian Thursdays. Grrls in their twenties and thirties flirt, dance and drink in an intimate yet sophisticated atmosphere suitable for lounging around elegantly or getting down-and-dirty on the dance floor. Men are completely extraneous at this ladies-only night, and the vibe is somewhere between an episode of The L Word and an all-girls weekend in P-Town. For giving Boston's lesbians a groovy place to hang out, we'd like to propose a toast to Toast.

MARTINIS AND POOL
Felt

533 Washington St., Boston, 617-350-5555,
www.feltboston.com

What's sexier than some young hottie with a pool cue challenging you to a game, and then sauntering off to the bar for a martini after beating the pants off you? That's a scene that's played out again and again in this sexiest of billiard clubs. Abundant tables are flanked by plush, red velvet banquettes. Oval-shaped, metal lamps with circular cut-outs hang from the ceiling, and the walls are exposed brick, metal and wood. Think The Jetsons meets Sinatra. The futuristic decor is incentive enough to hang out here, hence the regulars who have little interest in playing pool and instead prefer to hang out looking decidedly fabulous. This summer, the fourth floor is open for dancing and private parties, offering yet another draw.

MOST IMPROVED
Paradise Lounge

969 Comm. Ave., Boston, 617-562-8814, www.thedise.com

For a while, Comm. Ave.'s landmark Paradise Rock Club was on life support, occasionally drawing a decent crowd for a live show but not really offering much else in the way of enticement. We're pleased to report, however, that the patient has made a complete recovery, and the bar adjoining the legendary music venue now offers a new reason to check the place out. Manager Becky Nolan, formerly of the House of Blues, has unloaded a whole bag of tricks, including incredibly cheap and tasty food. Thur day nights are devoted to reggae, with top-flight local ac performing music as authentically Jamaican as Jasc Hart, the chef reigning in the kitchen. From 10 pm to am, the bar gets a second wind with pitchers of beer ar pizza for $8.95, but if you're the only one who wants eat, snag a $1 burger when you buy a beer or mixed drin More than a half-assed redesign or a lame refurb, it's whole new club and well worth a visit.

NO-FRILLS ADDITION TO THE BACK BAY
Dillon's

955 Boylston St., Boston, 617-421-1818

This place has been a bar since Hector was a pup, but b fore that it was the Boston Police Department's Divisi 16 headquarters (hence the dearly departed Division bar and restaurant). A few misfires in reinventing it ha finally been ironed out in the current incarnation, a what's left is a casual, comfortable spot with a relax vibe and zero attitude. Big, cushy booths line the wal and plush seating has been added to give the two level lounge feel. Young professionals come to entert clients, rubbing elbows with everyone from college st dents to veterans of the bar scene. The menu includ burgers, tapas and specialty pizzas, all well executed a affordable. In other words, it's a bar that feels like you come home from the office and changed into your vorite pair of jeans.

The Place

www.theplaceboston.com

The generic name belies the craziness that awaits inside this downtown hot spot catering to a hardcore party crowd. For the past three years the owners have been serving up a combination of live music, televised sports, dancing, flirting, games, contests and celebrity sightings. (A favorite among the pro sports crowd, the Place is ground zero on game day.) This summer, Wednesday nights have a beach-party theme, with the staff serving in bikinis. And anyone who's seen the hotties who work here will understand what an added incentive that is.

PLACE TO FIND A RELATIONSHIP OF LIMITED DURATION

Vox Populi

755 Boylston St., Boston, 617-424-8300,
www.voxboston.com

Face it: Sometimes, an evening's success isn't measured in good food or good conversation but in the number of digits collected—or better yet, whether or not you're grabbing a cab for two people and one destination by the time last call rolls around. For flirting or hooking up, Vox is happy hunting grounds. More cards get passed around than at a Japanese business convention, and the air is thick with the scent of perfume and cologne mixed with pheromones. The prowling begins at the first-floor bar, and, if that goes well, progresses to a banquette upstairs, where couples huddle while deciding whether the fish on the hook is a keeper or strictly catch-and-release. On any given night, there's more scoring here than at Fenway and the FleetCenter combined.

What used to be a nondescript downtown bank is now a little slice of India-cum-Paris as seen through the eyes of Lewis Carroll. The entrance is easy to miss; tall and narrow, it leads into a lounge and a long bar where thirsty Euros wet their whistles and stand around looking gorgeous. On one side of the high-concept dining room—which features Italian marble, a stretch of leather floor and curtains made of chain-metal and silk—is a 30-foot woven wooden structure: a hookah den. You'll half expect to find a smoking caterpillar inside, lounging on one of the red suede settees (though the smoking ban would put that insect in violation of the law). The place to take out-of-towners to show them that Boston is truly cosmopolitan.

Short of jetting off to Miami for the weekend, it's difficult for Bostonians to get a dose of Latin nightlife, unless they know about this smokin' Fenway hot spot. Blessedly free o kitschy theme-park touches (there are no plastic palm tre or piñatas hanging from the ceiling), Sophia's creates a vib with music, food and atmosphere, all of which will lea you and your date feeling like J.Lo and Marc Anthony. Th menu of Latin-inspired small plates is the equal of any i Boston, and Wednesday, Thursday and Friday night sals classes will turn even the biggest clod into a twinkle-toe One-on-one instruction is available, but the group lesson are a fun and easy way to meet new people. Quirky and unconventional are two adjectives that com to mind when we think of this funky outpost in JP. Long be fore bowling's current renaissance, this subterranean hide out was offering terrific tenpin, and it continues to lead th way in offbeat entertainment by hosting karaoke, Lati dancing, underground DJs, comedians and spoken-wor happenings. (Tuesday night Rock-Star Karaoke is so coo that actual rock stars, like the Breeders, have been know to stop by.) In the past year, the bar acquired a full liquor l cense and began renting out its kooky space for wedding rehearsal dinners and private functions. The brainchild Carol Downs and Katherine Mainzer, it's the hip litt nightlife venue that could, and does. And it continues t defy our expectations.

Sanctuary

189 State St., Boston, 617-573-9333, www.sanctuaryboston.com

Who knew the next cool place to chill would turn out to be hard by that stomping grounds for the 508/978 crowd, Faneuil Hall? This swanky nightspot is anything but middlebrow, and since opening in December it has consistently drawn an attractive crowd of urbane nightcrawlers. Two huge Buddha statues guard the entrance to the first floor, where you can spend the evening sipping Sanctuary Martinis (Ciroc and white grape juice, served in a glass with a grape-sugared rim). Alternately, you can head upstairs to the main dining room and choose from an extensive and tasty tapas menu. Nine plasma-screen TVs offer additional entertainment, and the bar boasts a new outdoor patio. At last, a place in the Financial District that caters to a clientele other than office drones.

tion, an annex to the fantasyland that is Jillian's. If you thought wet T-shirt contests and bodacious shot girls were a thing of the past, think again. All that and more are here to indulge your latent frat boy or secret sorority girl. Buff bodies wearing the tightest T-shirts and skimpiest halter tops jiggle and shake to the thumping beat. Slamming shots and behaving like you're 19 again are perfectly acceptable. The sort of place that Nelly was talking about when he sang, "It's gettin' hot in herre," this place is a reasonable facsimile of Cancun during that week in April when undergrads flee the books for the beach. In fact, the only thing missing is those guys who film the Girls Gone Wild videos.

PLACE TO SEE AND BE SEEN

Saint

90 Exeter St., Boston, 617-236-1134, www.saintnitery.com

The word "nightclub" is grossly inadequate for this den of distraction, which is why the owners coined the term "nitery." An evening here may leave you dizzy from surveying the scenery. Beyond the velvet ropes and down a flight of stairs, you'll find three distinct scenes: the Threshold Room, with its vodka infusion bar; the Bordello, with red fabric walls, plush banquettes and private nooks for snuggling; and the main room, with its long bar, long sofas, a communal table, a performance area for live music and a DJ booth. On any given night, all three are packed with a good-looking, well-dressed, well-heeled crowd. The place to go if your ego requires the stroke of being spotted among the city's biggest VIPs or you enjoy watching the terminally trendy in their natural habitat.

PRE-FENWAY

The Baseball Tavern

1306 Boylston St., Boston, 617-247-8152

The hours before a home game at Fenway are Darwinism at work; it's survival of the fittest to find a place to have a cold beer and practice chanting "Yankees suck." For rabid fans (the ones who keep the boys in their prayers every night before turning out the light), a stop at this watering hole is as much a part of going to a game as wondering how much Wally the Green Monster gets paid. Walls filled with Sox memorabilia suggest that someone with a serious case of OCD logged some long hours on eBay, and you're taking your life into your own hands if you wear any other team's logo. The burgers will tide you over till you get to that Fenway frank, and the oversized beers will calm your game-day jitters.

POST-FENWAY

Boston Beer Works

61 Brookline Ave., Boston, 617-536-2337, www.beerworks.net

It's not a bad idea to slip away during the seventh-inning stretch and beat the stampede to this microbrewery a stone's throw from Fenway. When the well at the ballpark runs dry, there are 16 homemade brews on tap here. Success at BBW's flagship establishment has led to the opening of two new locations, on Canal Street near North Station, and in Salem. As for the original, it might not actually overlook the Green Monster, but then again, you can't get air-crisp calamari in the bleacher seats, either. A pint of Bambino Ale is one way to scare away the curse. Whatever the outcome of the game, the beer here is always a winner.

PRE-FLEETCENTER

Hurricane O'Reilly's

150 Canal St., Boston, 617-722-0161, www.irishconnection.com

With a name like that, it's bound to be party central, an for getting your game on before the game at the Flee Center, it can't be beat. Join the diehard fans (and the od yahoo or two) at the bar as they get sufficiently lubricate before heading over to the game. And if your seats are i the nosebleed section, you might as well stay put. The ba tenders here are friendly, and the unique menu of Iris and Creole food beats anything served at the FleetCente

POST-FLEET CENTER

The Harp

After yelling yourself hoarse at a Celtics or Bruins gam you can soothe your throat (and hopefully celebrate th win) at this deservedly popular Irish pub in the shadow of North Station. Neither the food nor the decor is any thing to brag about, but the draw is the bar, and two floo on which to rehash the game, play by play, with anyon within earshot. They pour a great pint of Guinness, an the selection of other beers on tap is excellent. Whethe you're toasting a win or drowning your sorrows, it's th spot to have a few brews as soon as the game lets out.

SPORTS BAR

232 Old Colony Ave., Boston, 617-269-5700, www.stadiumbars.com

One of the few sports bars where women can feel comfo able, Stadium is a cut above the average big-screen-TV-an draft-beer testosterone-fest. But manly men won't be down either. With 31 plasma screens broadcasting the gam there's no bad seat in the house, which explains why loc from Southie, sports fans and sophisticated singles of a p suasions have flocked here since it opened in January. Lun and dinner are served seven days a week, with a hea brunch on Saturdays and Sundays, and the full-service ba open until 2 am. The reason to go, though, is the conge staff, who've been known to approach a customer at the and hand over Sox tickets for that night's game. Proof t the expression "great sports bar" isn't an oxymoron.

nomenon in this popular pub on the back side of Beacon Hill, the equivalent of a highway rest stop for city dwellers on their way home from the glass and marble canyons of the Financial District. Locals stop in solo, guaranteed to see people they know. Groups gather there automatically, since it's convenient and comfortable. PRO ATHLETE PLAYGROUND

The Rack

24 Clinton St., Boston, 617-725-1051, www.therackboston.com

This high-toned billiard club on the edge of Faneuil Hall maintains its lock on the hearts of players from the Red Sox, Patriots, Celtics and Bruins, not to mention visiting rock stars, celebrities, tourists, and financial types fresh from toiling in the nearby office towers. The pool tables are plentiful. Live music and talented DJs, an outdoor patio and a happening bar scene offer alternative distractions. An all-night menu of uncomplicated but tasty food quells the predinner hunger pangs or midnight munchies. But while the place itself attracts professional jocks, the dress code is decidedly not locker room: no shorts, T-shirts, baseball caps, sneakers or sandals. A laid-back scene for high-profile millionaires enjoying their down time.

RESURRECTION

Rise

306 Stuart St., Boston, 617-423-7473, www.riseclub.us

A city as hip as Boston needs an all-night dance club, where nocturnal groovers can bump and grind until the wee hours. After closing two years ago due to a fire in the space downstairs, this loftlike club rose from the ashes last November, completely revamped and cooler than ever. The club is open Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays beginning at 1:30 am, and the only way past Doug the doorman is to be a member, or the guest of one (membership is on a referral basis). Despite the lack of alcohol, local and nationally known DJs bring a party-hearty vibe, serving up progressive trance tracks and hard house music. A new interior and lighting and sound systems create an ambient environment for nocturnal club-crawlers. Fridays are geared toward a hetero scene, while Saturdays draw a gay crowd. For those who start to get their groove on after midnight, it's the only place to dance until dawn.

SADDEST FAREWELL

Kendall Café

If you're a sucker for singer-songwriters, you may have found yourself aimlessly wandering the streets since the Cambridge's Kendall Café closed last November. In fact, something's so obviously missing that the square now feels more like a triangle. On any given night, Kendall patrons could order from an affordable and imaginative menu, down a cheap draft from the list of beer specials and hear talented, up-and-coming musicians. A last-ditch effort to keep its doors open by offering free music throughout October apparently wasn't enough, and a venue that hosted performers ranging from Elvis Costello to Jewel is now silent. Yet another great live music venue bites the dust. Makes us think it won't be long before the only place to catch an acoustic set is in a subway station.

Rattlesnake Bar & Grill

www.therattlesnakebarandgrill.com

After a brief (and some might say misguided) reinvention as George—an American Tavern, the Rattlesnake Bar & Grill is back, and so is the crowd who made it such a hap pening spot. Inspired by Boston's patron saint of barbecu Chris Schlesinger, the chefs are back at the grill, creatin such yummy pan-Latin dishes as Puerto Rican pork toston and pepita-crusted salmon. The rooftop deck will welcom you with one of Boston's few above-street-level, open-a bar scenes. We didn't realize how much we missed the Ra tlesnake until it was gone, and we can't overstate ho happy we are that it's back.

WATERING HOLE FOR THE WELL-HEELED

Radius

8 High St., Boston, 617-426-1234, www.radiusrestaurant.com

Fittingly, one of the city's most gorgeous restaurants also home to one of its poshest bars. On any give evening, well-dressed patrons perch on the cushy chai and sleek stools that flank the bar's mix of high and lo tables, relishing Radius' cool-but-not-cold ambience. Yo won't find a more stylish drinks list in Boston—amon the options are Joe's Brown Sugar Margarita, a swe makeover of the cocktail classic; the strawberry-bas cooler, a chilly combo of fresh berries, Thai basil and Ci ron; the Radius Royale, Champagne swirled with pom granate juice; and a sour-apple martini made with fres squeezed Granny Smiths. If those celestial nectars lea you yearning for more substantial ambrosia, flit over the restaurant and let chef de cuisine Brian Reimer tran port you to yet another level of heaven.

WILD NIGHT OUTSIDE THE CITY

Anyone who thinks nothing happens in the suburbs ne only drive to Saugus to learn how wrong they are. Th legendary nightlife complex boasts 12 rooms on tw floors where the people-watching is beyond yo wildest expectations. The Male Encounter offe carved-out-of-granite guys stripping down to their strings, while Rio boasts young hard-bodies grindi suggestively beneath barely-clad dancers in cag hanging from the ceiling and on stages at eye lev Like Rio, Oxygen tends toward hip-hop and top-4 while Copa plays Latin tunes. At 22 years and coun ing, the Palace is older than some of its patrons, b it's still the most sizzling scene outside the city.

WINE BAR

Vinalia

34 Summer St., Boston, 617-737-1777, www.vinaliaboston.com

Wine worshippers, rejoice! Other cities are craw ing with wine bars—in fact, you can't walk down street in London without passing several—but some reason, Boston lags in this respect. Sin opening in October near Downtown Crossi Vinalia has helped to fill the void. Specializing the fruit of the vine, this swank hot spot's na means "festival of wine" in Latin. At regular w dinners, delicious food is paired with selecti from a specific vineyard, and a vintner on hand swers questions. Vinalia's wine flights are t notch, and its list is wide-ranging in terms of b style and price, with roughly 250 bottles and wines available by the glass. Whether you're a s soned oenophile or a plonk-swilling philisti there's something to appeal to every palate. In f the only wine-related thing the folks at Vin can't help you with is the humiliation of asking a white zinfandel.

AFTER-DRINK DRINKS

Boston Sail Loft

80 Atlantic Ave., Boston, 617-227-7280

Like many waterfront bars, this North End landmark boasts nautical decor that errs on the side of retired fishing nets, buoys and lobster traps. But the hearty food and air of congeniality give it genuine character. Breezy in the summer and cozy in the winter, it's the ideal place to extend an evening that began with drinks. Its views of the harbor remind you that Boston, at heart, is a seafaring town—and so does its food. Satisfy your hunger by chowing down on a bowl of chowder or sharing a plate of mussels. A place for good conversation and good times, without all the hoopla and folderol.

nobs would have you believe that the only place ou can eat out for under $10 these days is Mc-onald's, but they've never been to this neighbor-ood nexus in Allston, where everything is deli-ous, familiar and cheap. At the White Horse, ou can get a superior burger and fries, Sunday rough Tuesday, for a mere $4, and anyone who esn't eat red meat can enjoy a grilled chicken ndwich or a pound of wings for the same price. you're willing to splurge and spend a whopping bucks on a Wednesday or Thursday night, you d your buddies can pound back a pound of their perb steak tips. On Fridays and Saturdays, try e delicious London broil with garlic mashed tatoes or Cobb salad for the same price. Supple-ent your meal with a glass of Harpoon IPA 3.75) or a bottle of Bud Light ($3.25). Who says u can't afford to go out every night?

BACK BAY

Clerys

113 Dartmouth St., Boston, 617-262-9874, www.irishconnection.com

you want to party like you're still in college ongside a few kids who are still in college), this efree neighborhood spot is the watering hole to ad to. Unlike the more upscale, self-consciously bars in the Back Bay, this Irish bar has the d-back atmosphere of a keg party, with loud pop sic on the sound system and plenty of people h two left feet on the dance floor. One indica-n of its popularity is the line that begins to tch down the street by 11 pm. The first Thurs-y of each month is a real gut-buster, with local comedi-s from places like Nick's Comedy Stop performing. eck the responsible-adult act at the door, relax and oy yourself.

BEACON HILL

The Sevens Alehouse

77 Charles St., Boston, 617-523-9074

re are seven reasons to go to the Sevens: 1: The ale-use, around since 1933, hasn't changed a bit for as g as anyone can remember. 2: If you've been there ore, you'll probably recognize the staff, since one man has worked there for over 20 years and another s been there since 1985. 3: If you've been there be-e, chances are good that the bartender will remember at you drink. 4: If you go in alone, the bartender will ually talk to you. 5: If you go in with friends, no one l shoot you dirty looks when your table erupts in ghter. 6: The odds are good that you'll meet some l people from the neighborhood. 7: If those reasons n't good enough for you, then you need a drink badly l should go there as soon as possible.

BRIGHTON

The Last Drop

596 Washington St., Brighton, 617-787-1111

spite its name, the Last Drop shouldn't be your last p during a night out in Brighton. In fact, it's not a bad a to arrive at noon when it opens and be entertained the staff until last call. A friendly, funny crew engages in take-no-prisoners goofiness, while a diverse crowd of regulars enjoys the laid-back atmosphere and down-to-earth drink prices. Be sure to ask for a Sexual Alligator, the signature drink of Derek, a former IMPROPER BOSTONIAN Most Beloved Bartender.

HARVARD SQUARE

Redline

59 JFK St., Cambridge, 617-491-9851, www.redlinecambridge.com

There's a fine line between cool and cold, hip and pretentious, and in Harvard Square, that line is red. Amid all the pseudo pubs and faux dives, this bar stands out for its DJs, dancing, sophisticated cocktails, appealing crowd and welcoming ambience. During daylight hours, the business-lunch crowd holds court, and early evening brings an upscale dining crowd. But after 10 pm, the tables are cleared to make room for dancing and a DJ booth. A sunken brick patio offers a place to cool off in warm weather. A bit of the Back Bay in the heart of Harvard Square.

BROOKLINE

Washington Square Tavern

714 Washington St., Brookline, 617-232-8989, www.washingtonsquaretavern.com

A cozy little hole-in-the-wall with better-than-average food, it's a good place to jump-start the evening or settle in for the duration. A consistently appealing crowd includes not only locals but people who actually travel to get there—a testament to the fact that it's a truly great neighborhood bar. The raspberry gimlets are to-die-for, and the warm wood tones make the interior a great place to hunker down during lousy weather. Bonus points for not trying to be anything other than what it is: a comfortable, gimmick-free joint.

CAMBRIDGE—CENTRAL SQUARE

Cantab Lounge

738 Mass Ave., Cambridge, 617-354-2685, www.cantablounge.com

A beloved landmark in a neighborhood studded with great places to drink, the Cantab earns this award mostly for one reason: Little Joe Cook. Leader of the in-house band on Fridays and Saturdays, this legendary blues musician is best known for his 1950s hit song "Peanuts," which is cool enough that the Frankie Valli & the Four Seasons version of it was played in the background of a Sopranos episode. On Mondays, the stage hosts a folk jam; Tuesdays, there's bluegrass pickin'; Wednesdays and Sundays, blues fiends channel Muddy Waters; and Thursdays, comedy and music share the spotlight. Every night, meanwhile, there's a complete cross-section of society—from CEOs to starving artists—hanging out and enjoying themselves.

CAMBRIDGE—KENDALL SQUARE

Flat Top Johnny's

1 Kendall Square, Building 200, Cambridge, 617-494-9565, www.flattopjohnnys.com

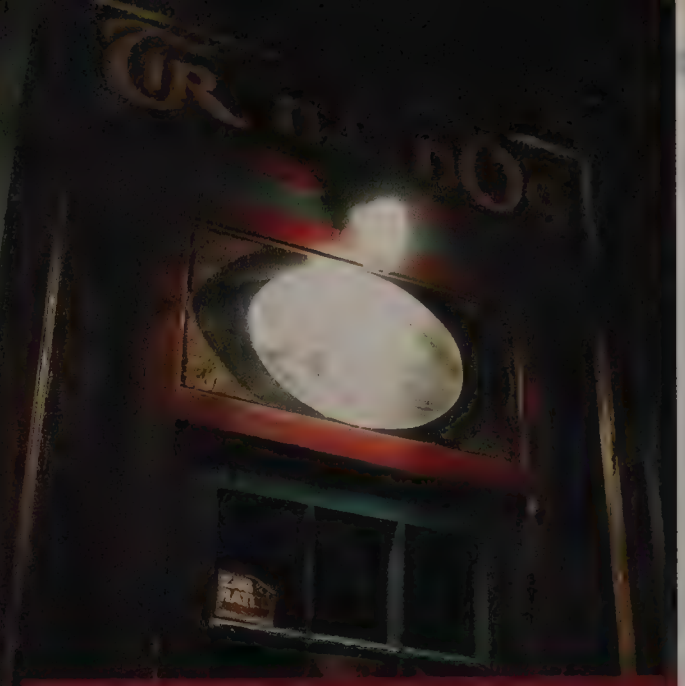
Its proximity to MIT, the Kendall Square Cinema and the high-tech companies that occupy the nearby office towers means that Flat Top's is always lively, with an interesting and eclectic crowd. Aside from eating and drinking, diversions include pool, darts, pinball and the ever-popular Golden Tee, but perhaps best of all is the fact that you'll never hear top-40 on the sound system. Instead, it's indie rock, funk and old soul. A recent renovation did nothing to lessen its quirky charm. We never pass by without stopping in for a quaff.

CAMBRIDGE—PORTER SQUARE

Toad

1920 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-497-4950

Like the endearingly plain amphibian it's named for, this charming little bar puts on no airs. It's worth a visit just to see how much goes on in such a small space—just a bar along the left wall, seats along the right, and in back, a stage that showcases some of the city's best bands seven nights a week. Amazingly, it never feels cramped or claustrophobic. Instead, it's like shrugging into that old college sweatshirt: a bit snug perhaps, but completely comfortable.



CHARLESTOWN

The Warren Tavern

2 Pleasant St., Charlestown, 617-241-8142, www.warrentavern.com

It's amazing when a bar or restaurant stays in business for a few decades. It's downright unbelievable when one thrives for centuries. Since the days of George Washington and Paul Revere (both of whom, rumor has it, actually hoisted a few frosties here), the Warren Tavern has been serving superior vittles and grog. The low ceilings and uneven floor attest to its colonial origins, but a convivial crowd of regulars prevents it from feeling like a museum or a set piece. The award-winning chowder deserves fulsome praise, and live entertainment on Wednesday and Thursday nights is almost as diverting as listening to the regulars crack wise at the bar. A picture of this place should appear in the dictionary next to the word "quaint."

DORCHESTER

The Blarney Stone

1505 Dorchester Ave., Dorchester, 617-436-8223, www.blarneystoneboston.com

Evolving right along with the neighborhood, which has begun to attract a young, diverse and upwardly mobile crowd, this neighborhood haunt has kept pace. Although it retains its Irish name and a predominantly Irish staff, nothing about the place says Irish pub. Instead, there are DJs, pool tables and an extensive cocktail list that goes way beyond Guinness and whiskey to include Mojitos, Mai Tais and the wildly popular Pink Surf (the contents of which remain a mystery). Whether you're a Dorchester native or a fresh import, check out the Blarney Stone, where anything goes and everyone's welcome.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING

J.J. Foley's

21 Kingston St, Boston, 617-338-7713

If you're a suit seeking to get somewhat (or supremely) sloshed, this Financial District destination is the place to hit. After a long day of crunching numbers, switch to crunching pub grub: Foley's bar menu offers snacks, sandwiches and mean chicken quesadillas until 9 pm. Professionals can also decompress by browsing the selection of 130,000 songs on the Internet jukebox. But the main draw is the drinks, including Pabst Blue Ribbon for $2.25 and Guinness for $4. Mixed drinks are also moderately priced—a fact that makes adding up the tab less than taxing, even if the market's a bear.

SOMERVILLE—UNION SQUARE

Tir na nÓg

366A Somerville Ave., Somerville, 617-628-4300
www.thenog.com

Translated from Gaelic, Tir na nÓg means "land of eternal youth," but the over-30 crowd needn't worry. It's a youthful attitude that counts here. On any given night, the bar is populated by folks so chummy you'd think they knew each other in a previous lifetime, and after one drink, the inclusive vibe will apply to you too. Live music nightly and lip-smacking pub-grub add to the appeal. Everything a neighborhood bar should be, without any of the parochial snobbery and exclusionist attitude of some other local pubs.

draws cognoscenti from all over the city for its blend of trendiness and old-world charm. When packed to the rafters, it holds only about 90 people, and the lights and music are kept low to accommodate conversation. Many aficionados would claim the Behan pours the best Guinness in town, and we're not about to argue. Irish comfort and hospitality with a slightly artsy edge, it's like the coolest, most bohemian pub in ar. unselfconsciously hip part of Dublin.

NEWTON

Union Street Restaurant

107-R Union St., Newton Centre, 617-964-6684, www.unionst.com

Yes, there's nightlife west of Boston, and you can find it in this surprisingly happening watering hole tucked away in Newton Center, which attracts an appealing combination of college students, young professionals and others who want a night on the town without driving into town. The vibe is like that of an après-ski bar in Killington: laid-back yet raucous, with none of the sniffy pretentiousness of many in-town clubs. In warm weather, the outdoor patio is a fantastic place to hang, and the restaurant is used to handling large crowds, so you can descend with 40 of your closest friends and still get decent service. Who knew such grooviness existed way out in the burbs?

NORTH END

Waterfront Café

450 Commercial St., Boston, 617-523-4055

Most people visit the North End for the Italian restaurants, but this bar warrants a trip on its own. A recent expansion has added more space and ratcheted the number of taps up to 12. Plus, there are three plasma-screen and five regular TVs. No wonder this is where locals in the know hang out. A new menu features brick-oven pizzas, and the boisterous crowd is friendly without being obnoxious. It's also the best place to meet a guy or gal in un form, thanks to the Coast Guard station across the stree

SOMERVILLE—INMAN SQUARE

The Abbey Lounge

3 Beacon St., Somerville, 617-441-9631, www.schnockered.com

The type of mid-20th-century place that's disappearin all too quickly: a bar without a theme or a concept, whe people can gather to relax and socialize without parti with a week's paycheck or worrying what they look lik With outstanding live music Wednesdays through Satu days, the Abbey serves Pabst Blue Ribbon for two buck and a mixed drink will only set you back twice tha Owner J. Grimaldi describes it as old-fashioned, which exactly what we love about this place.

The curtain rises to reveal a neighborhood in Sou Boston. Center stage is a local pub, the Playwright. man enters, stage left, and approaches the door. Anoth man enters stage right. Sully: "Hey, Fitzy, comin' in to out the new menu?" Fitzy: "Maybe, but what I really wa is one or two of the 10 beers on tap." Sully: "It's Mond We could split a pitcher and a pizza for $14." Fit "Sounds good. Or we could get one of those new Tal Tappers." Sully: "What the…?" Fitzy: "They're cylinde about 3 feet tall, filled with beer or a frozen drink. T bartender brings it to your table, and at the bott there's a little tap so you can pour your own drink Sully: "Yeah, let's get one, 'cause the Sox game is on an don't wanna keep getting up for drinks." Fitzy: "Hey the Sox are on, then we could win tickets to the ne game at Fenway if we predict the score." The two hig five, open the door and disappear into the Playwrig Fade to black.

SOUTH END

Delux

100 Chandler St., Boston, 617-338-5258

A bundle of contradictions, it's a funky dive with gr food and a sophisticated clientele. Graffiti and kitsc album covers decorate the walls. And while Delux ste fastly refuses to become part of the gentrified South E it remains at the hub of the chichi neighborhood's soc scene. The pine paneling and lack of natural light part of the charm, as is the continuous soundtrack co tesy of one of a hundred mix tapes lovingly made by owner. The reasonable prices make it possible to stay night, and the place feels so comfortable (much like rumpus room of your parents' house) that one regular cided to stay and become the bartender. ⟶

COMEDY ACT

DJ Hazard

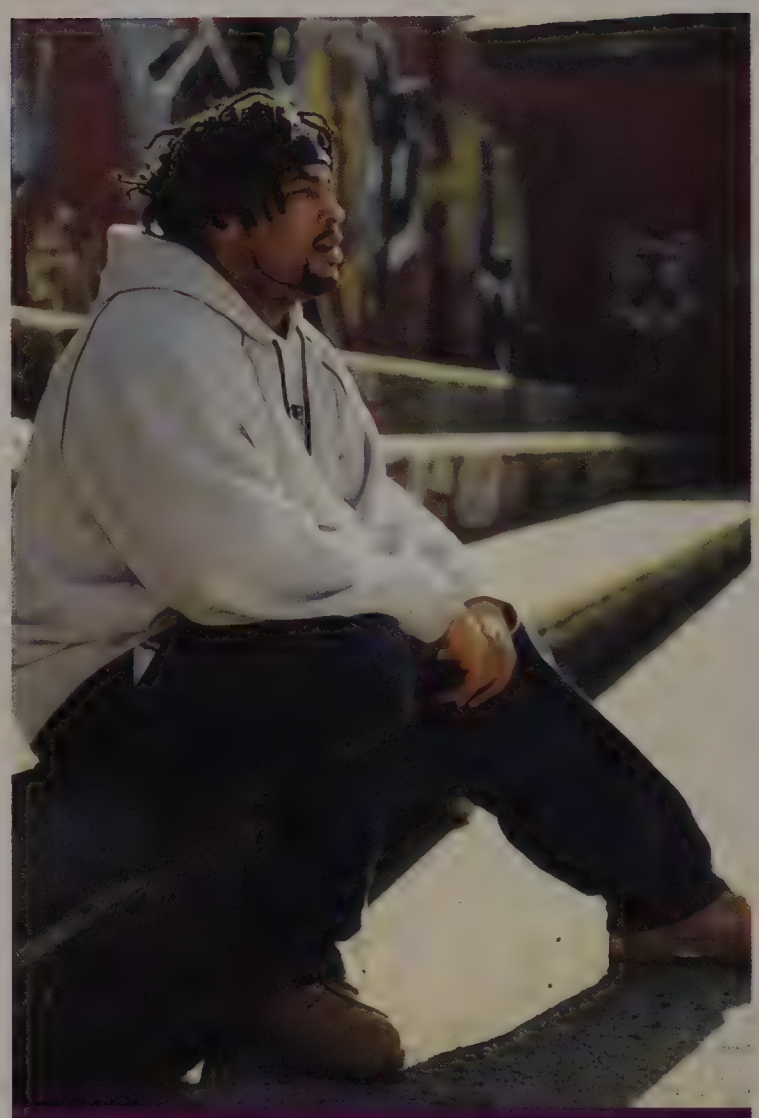
www.djhazard.com

He wowed 'em at this year's Boston International Comedy and Film Festival with his hilarious blend of wry observations, edgy bluster and original music. During the 1980s, he cut his teeth at dives like the Ding Ho Club in Inman Square, alongside such comics as Bobcat Goldthwait, Paula Poundstone, Lenny Clarke, Jimmy Tingle and Denis Leary. Now it's Hazard's turn to go big-time. In addition to touring locally and nationally, he stars with The Daily Show's Rob Corddry in Blackballed, a film that won the audience award at this year's South by Southwest Film Festival in Texas. He has another movie with the same producers on the way, and it's only a matter of time before a larger audience takes to Hazard's uniquely Boston brand of side-splitting comedy. No need to fear him going all Hollywood, though. As down-to-earth as they come, he still takes the T everywhere.

DEAL

The Coolidge Corner Theatre's Coolidge Club Membership

290 Harvard St., Brookline, 617-734-2500, www.coolidge.org



One of the area's most innovative and exciting cinemas is also one of its best bargains, thanks to a program that saves serious cinéastes beaucoup bucks. Becoming a member of the Coolidge Club makes both sense and cents: For $50 each, a group of four friends can get a one-year "Cast Card" membership entitling them to $3 off the ticket price for regular films (midnight films and some special series are excluded) and eight small popcorns. If you don't like sharing popcorn, or you go to the movies more often than all your friends, the $60 "Actor" card gives you $3 off regular movies for a year, plus two small popcorns. If you're a serious film enthusiast, become a "Director" for $150 (free admission to regular movies on Mondays and Tuesdays, $3 off through the rest of the week and free popcorn anytime) or a "Producer" for $350 (the same perks, except admission's free from Sunday through Thursday). You can also give Harvey Weinstein a run for his money by becoming a "Movie Mogul." For $1,000, you can see an unlimited number of regular movies (admission's free for both you and a friend), eat unlimited amounts of popcorn, bask in the glow of your own engraved seat plaque, and get a free one-night rental of the Coolidge's Screening Room. An additional benefit to any level of membership: Because the Coolidge is a not-for-profit organization, a portion of the club cost is tax deductible.

FRINGE THEATER

SpeakEasy Stage Company

539 Tremont St., Boston, 617-482-3279, www.speakeasystage.com

If the point of going to the theater is to make you think, then this Boston company is doing its job brilliantly. Rather than mounting endless revivals of Arthur Miller or Tennessee Williams, the SpeakEasy spotlights fresh local talent. During its 2003–2004 MainStage season (its 13th), the company presented the New England premieres of three musicals—including The Last 5 Years by Tony winner Jason Robert Brown and A Man of No Importance by Tony and Pulitzer Prize winner Terrence McNally—and two plays. In addition to entertaining its audience, the SpeakEasy engages them, hosting frequent feedback sessions with playwrights and directors. (Nationally acclaimed playwright Wendy Wasserstein is an honorary board member.) Strong support from local institutions (SpeakEasy is among the Boston Center for the Arts' four theater-groups-in-residence) and rigorously thought-provoking programming (this season's final production, The Last Sunday in June, was about a group of gay men watching New York's ann Gay Pride parade) make the SpeakEasy on the city's most vital and exciting arts groups. Theater District may be where The Lion K roars, or the wind comes sweeping down plain, but the South End is where the new exciting takes center stage.

HIP-HOP ACT

Akrobatik

www.akrobatik.com

Local legend Akrobatik has been bubbling up on the hip-hop horizon for a Boston minute. Last year, with a fistful of excellent 12" singles and an EP under his belt, he released his first full-length album, Balance, a powerhouse of positivity. It's a collection of songs that evoke the essential spirit of hip-hop's golden age, with an updated sound. Akrobatik's music is a refreshing and charismatic reminder of hip-hop's immense potential for uplifting social change and progress—plus, you can bump Ak's tracks while you cruise, and heads will turn like, "What was that hotness?" Keep an ear out for Akrobatik's next release: a collaborative album with fellow Bostonian-gone-big-timer Mr. Lif, under the name the Perceptionists.

Along came Emer- n alum and trustee Ted Cutler and his wife, Joan. ıanks to a renovation they paid for—which closed the eater from April 2002 to its official reopening in Octo- r 2003 and involved a large-scale overhaul of the cor, lighting and seating—the theater's circa 1903 endor is again on display. COMEDY CLUB

The Comedy Connection

245 Quincy Market, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston

No other Boston venue offers the quality of acts or immediacy that you'll find at the Comedy Connection, which features local and national talent seven nights a week in an up-close-and-personal setting. Regardless of your seats, you're guaranteed an excellent view of Margaret Cho's every grimace or Jon Stewart's slightest smirk. Familiar stomping ground for headliners like Chris Rock (who has tried out new material there twice in the past year) and local favorite Dane Cook (who appears there three or four times annually), the wet-your-pants hilarity never stops. In years past, summer has served as the club's time to test emerging and unknown local talent, but this year, some major names (like Lewis Black and Jim Breuer) are booked along with the up-and-comers. Take it from us: It's not a bad idea to come equipped with a box of Depends.

ORIGINAL PROGRAMMING
Boston Theater Marathon
www.bu.edu/btm

This Boston marathon is measured not in miles but in drama, with a whopping 45 original plays, each produced by a different New England theater company and staged during a 10-hour period. The odds are good that even the most finicky audience member will find something to his liking, with a thematic diversity that ranges from lighthearted vignettes to dark mood pieces to acerbic satire. The participating actors are an equally varied bunch, comprising relative unknowns and veteran stage names. The sets and costumes are understandably sparse, but effectively so, while proceeds from the event go to charities like the Theatre Community Benevolent Fund. Though next year's marathon (which takes place in May, and accepts submissions from wannabe playwrights from September through November 15) is jumping ship from its traditional digs at the Boston Playwrights' Theatre to the larger Virginia Wimberley Theatre on Tremont Street, it's still perhaps the world's only marathon geared toward those with short attention spans: Each play lasts 10 minutes or less.

READING SERIES
Newtonville Books' "Books & Brews"
296 Walnut St., Newton, 617-244-6619,
www.newtonvillebooks.com

This weekly series' innovative format is anything but standard: Instead of hightailing it out of the room as soon as decorum will allow, the authors involved in Books & Brews follow their readings by kicking back, mingling and, yes, drinking with their fans at local restaurant Ariadne. According to Newtonville Books owner and literary man-about-town Tim Huggins, the participating writers—who, in the past year, have included Matthew Pearl and Donna Morrissey ("a real hoot," Huggins says)—are just as enthusiastic as their sometimes rabid fans, and instead of a one-sided performance, a reading becomes a fully interactive party. And authors like National Book Award finalist Brad Watson (The Heaven of Mercury) want to keep the party going strong: "Tim Huggins and Newtonville Books are to Boston what Sylvia Beech and Shakespeare & Co. must have been to Paris in the '20s," Watson says.

RESURRECTION
The Opera House
539 Washington St., Boston, 617-880-2442

Prior to July 16th, when Broadway in Boston presented The Lion King to a sold-out crowd, the last show to open at the Opera House was Black Nativity in 1990. Thanks to a $38 million restoration, the venue (now owned by Clear Channel Entertainment) reclaims its rightful place among Boston's performance venues, and the South Washington Street neighborhood where it's located is out of the woods. In fact, it's downright sizzling: The Lion King is generating so much buzz—and such ferocious ticket sales—that its run was extended from 14 to 26 weeks, and the restaurants and retailers in the area stand to profit handsomely from all the activity. Not bad for a building that in 1995 was declared one of America's 11 most endangered historical sites by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

ROCK BAND
The Lot Six
www.thelotsix.com

Not many bands with a general punk aesthetic would feel comfortable busting out some hammy '70s-style guitar noodling, but Lot Six can pull it off. As a result of its unique, genre-bending sound, the band's fan base ranges from long-haired, Led Zeppelin–loving metalheads to n tiply pierced, Mohawk-sporting punks and everyone in tween. "I like to think that our fans are more honest ab their musical tastes and less concerned about how 'coo is to be there," bass player Dano Burke says. The band's est release, Major Fables, was recorded in just a few day Boston's New Alliance Studios and came out to o whelmingly positive reviews. But Boston isn't the c town listening: The Lot Six just completed a national with the Distillers and the Icarus Line. The band's plan the coming year? "Simple," says Burke. "Tour—anywh and everywhere we can." Which is great news for all of Few things in life can't be improved by the addition o a 15-piece marching band, and art appreciation is no exception. One of the few remaining places in Cam bridge that lives up to the city's reputation as an edgy experimental bohemia, the never-boring Zeitgeis Gallery in Inman Square hosts 60 shows each month displaying the work of avant-garde painters, sculptors graphic and digital-media artists, photographers an more—often accompanied by the aforementione parade-style brass band. (If you prefer improv jazz a an accompaniment, resident ensemble the Fringe one of the many wildly inventive music groups tha plays there.) In addition to highlighting the visual arts the Zeitgeist hosts film screenings, poetry reading and performance art pieces guaranteed to coax a r action out of even the most jaded and world-wear art snob. The anything-goes creative spirit of Green wich Village in the 1950s is alive and well and living i Inman Square.

ART HOUSE MOVIE THEATER
Brattle Theatre

40 Brattle St., Cambridge, 617-876-6837, www.brattlefilm.org

For 50 years, this theater has fulfilled its mission to celebrate film as art. During the past year alone, the Brattle has hosted premieres of award-winning documentaries like The Weather Underground and independent features like Lilya 4-Ever. In addition to being a major force on the contemporary film scene—both the Boston Independent Film Festival and the annual Chlotrudis awards call the Brattle home—its programming leaves plenty of room for reissued classics or neglected and obscure gems from cinematic history. Seeing Bogey and Bacall on the Brattle's big screen is nothing short of breathtaking, while generations of film buffs have discovered the oeuvres of directors like Bergman, Fellini and Almodovar. The theater's commitment to making film accessible to everyone includes free weekly screenings for new parents—Rattle at the Brattle—and it frequently hosts bold-faced names like Quincy Jones and Colm Meaney to talk about their experiences in film. The quintessential art house, the Brattle is committed to showcasing films that provoke thought and conversation, rather than just the latest dreck from Hollywood.

ROCK CLUB
The Middle East

472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-864-3278, www.mideastclub.com

What more can we say about this Central Square institution, one of the last vestiges of the days when Boston was chockablock with live-music venues? Its primary charm is its eclecticism; you never know what you'll find when you walk through the door. Rock stars in leather tuxedos and blue-shellacked mohawks mingle with nouveau hippie folksingers. It's got four stages, two of which are in the club's restaurants, Zuzu and the Corner—meaning nearly endless nightly choices for both moshers and noshers. A proving ground for local and national bands, the club presents three or four shows (by the likes of Cake, Suicide Girls and even Hanson) every night of the week. And the Middle East's already-extensive reach may soon stretch even further: In April, owners Joseph and Nabil Sater purchased the abandoned Somerville Armory. They're planning to work their Middle Eastern magic on the property by transforming the castlelike structure into a cultural center, complete with gallery space and a performance area.

SUITE RELIEF
Boston Ballet's Nutcracker Finding a New Home

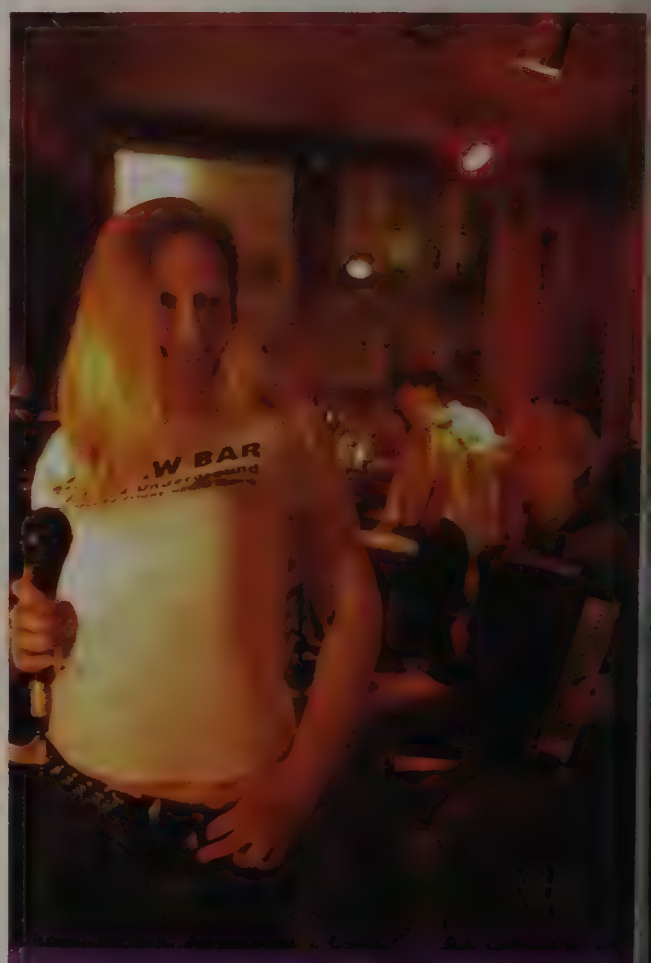
The Opera House, 539 Washington St., Boston, 617-880-2442, www.broadwayinboston.com

When the Wang Center announced that it was replacing the Boston Ballet's annual production of The Nutcracker with The Radio City Christmas Spectacular starting in 2004, you'd think they'd announced their intention to shoot Santa and poison all his reindeer. The ensuing tempest in a teapot had cranks on both sides of the equation writing impassioned letters to the editor, until what everyone knew would happen happened: The Nutcracker got a new home. The newly refurbished Opera House will host Clara and Co. from 2005 through 2008 (with the Colonial hosting it this year, in the interim), and the opulent renovation means Drosselmeier's got fancy new digs. Now what was all that invective about?

SUMMER EVENING ACTIVITY
FleetBoston Pavilion



290 Northern Ave., Boston, 617-728-1600, www.fleetbostonpavilion.com

Sydney may have its famous Opera House, but Boston's waterfront boasts this tentlike open-air concert venue that attracts top-notch entertainers—from Bjork to Beck—without a bad seat in the house. There are no obstructed views, and in addition to great sightlines toward the stage, there's a panoramic view of the city's skyline and harbor. The Harborwalk supplements the view with tables and gorgeous stretches of green perfect for picnicking and watching the sunset on nonshow days. Meanwhile, Big Dig–related improvements, water taxi service, a free shuttle from South Station, and the Silver Line T stop that will open half a block from the front gates in 2005 make the pavilion more accessible than ever. Say what you will about the evils of corporate America: We have the local financial behemoth (recently merged with Bank of America) to thank for this jewel.

SWANKIEST CINEMATIC EXPERIENCE
The Wang Center's Classic Film Series

270 Tremont St., Boston, 617-482-9393, www.wangcenter.org

Back in 1925, when the phrase "movie palace" wasn't ridiculous hyperbole, the opulent, gilded, marble and rococo theater we now call the Wang was built as a place to see films. Now primarily a live performance venue, the Wang Theatre returns to its roots with screenings of popular classic films on Monday nights (traditionally "dark nights in the theater world). During the past year, audiences have watched such favorites as Breakfast at Tiffany's, Miracle on 34th St. and The Wizard of Oz amid the splendor of velvet seats and all those plaster grapes and putti. Not only that, but they viewed them on a 46-by-60-foot screen that ranks as New England's largest. On this trip back to the golden age of Hollywood, the most amazing (and perhaps our favorite) thing is that admission is free. ⊷

REVIVAL
Cabaret

Whether you prefer your singers in full drag regalia in a raucous revue, demurely crooning "Over the Rainbow" in a dimly lit room, or somewhere in between, Boston is enjoying a cabaret renaissance that means there's a show for every sensibility, from saucy chanteuse to melancholy baby. Just witness the national success of the punk rock–meets–Weimar Republic duo the Dresden Dolls, or the standing-room-only crowds squealing for the female impersonators strutting their stuff at Jacques. Kennedy's Midtown recently opened a less flamboyant but no less entertaining piano bar in its back room and will host cabaret nights on Sundays this fall. Meanwhile, at P.A.'s Lounge on the last Saturday of each month, you can catch surrealist-themed evenings called Le Cabaret des Enfants Terribles. Loyal patrons aren't the only ones enjoying the ambience at the more traditional Encore Cabaret Lounge in the Theater District. Actors performing in nearby theaters frequently drop in and sometimes even perform. If life is a cabaret, Boston these days offers a lot of lifestyle options.

BILL MUELLER PLEASANT SURPRISE AWARD

Pokey Reese

At the beginning of the Red Sox season, conventional wisdom held that Pokey Reese was no Todd Walker at the plate but would be helpful on defense and provide speed on the basepaths—a role player, in other words. Then Nomar went down, and Pokey stepped up in a big way. His hitting has been about what we expected, but his defense has been better than anyone imagined, propelling him to second place in the American League All-Star voting at second base, behind only Alfonso Soriano. On June 13 against the Dodgers, Pokey made a play that qualifies as one of the best in the majors thus far this season, leaping high in the air at second base and snaring a line drive out of the sky. Whether at shortstop or second base, there's no wrong way to play a Pokey Reese.

BRIDGE-BURNING...AND REBUILDING

Ty Law

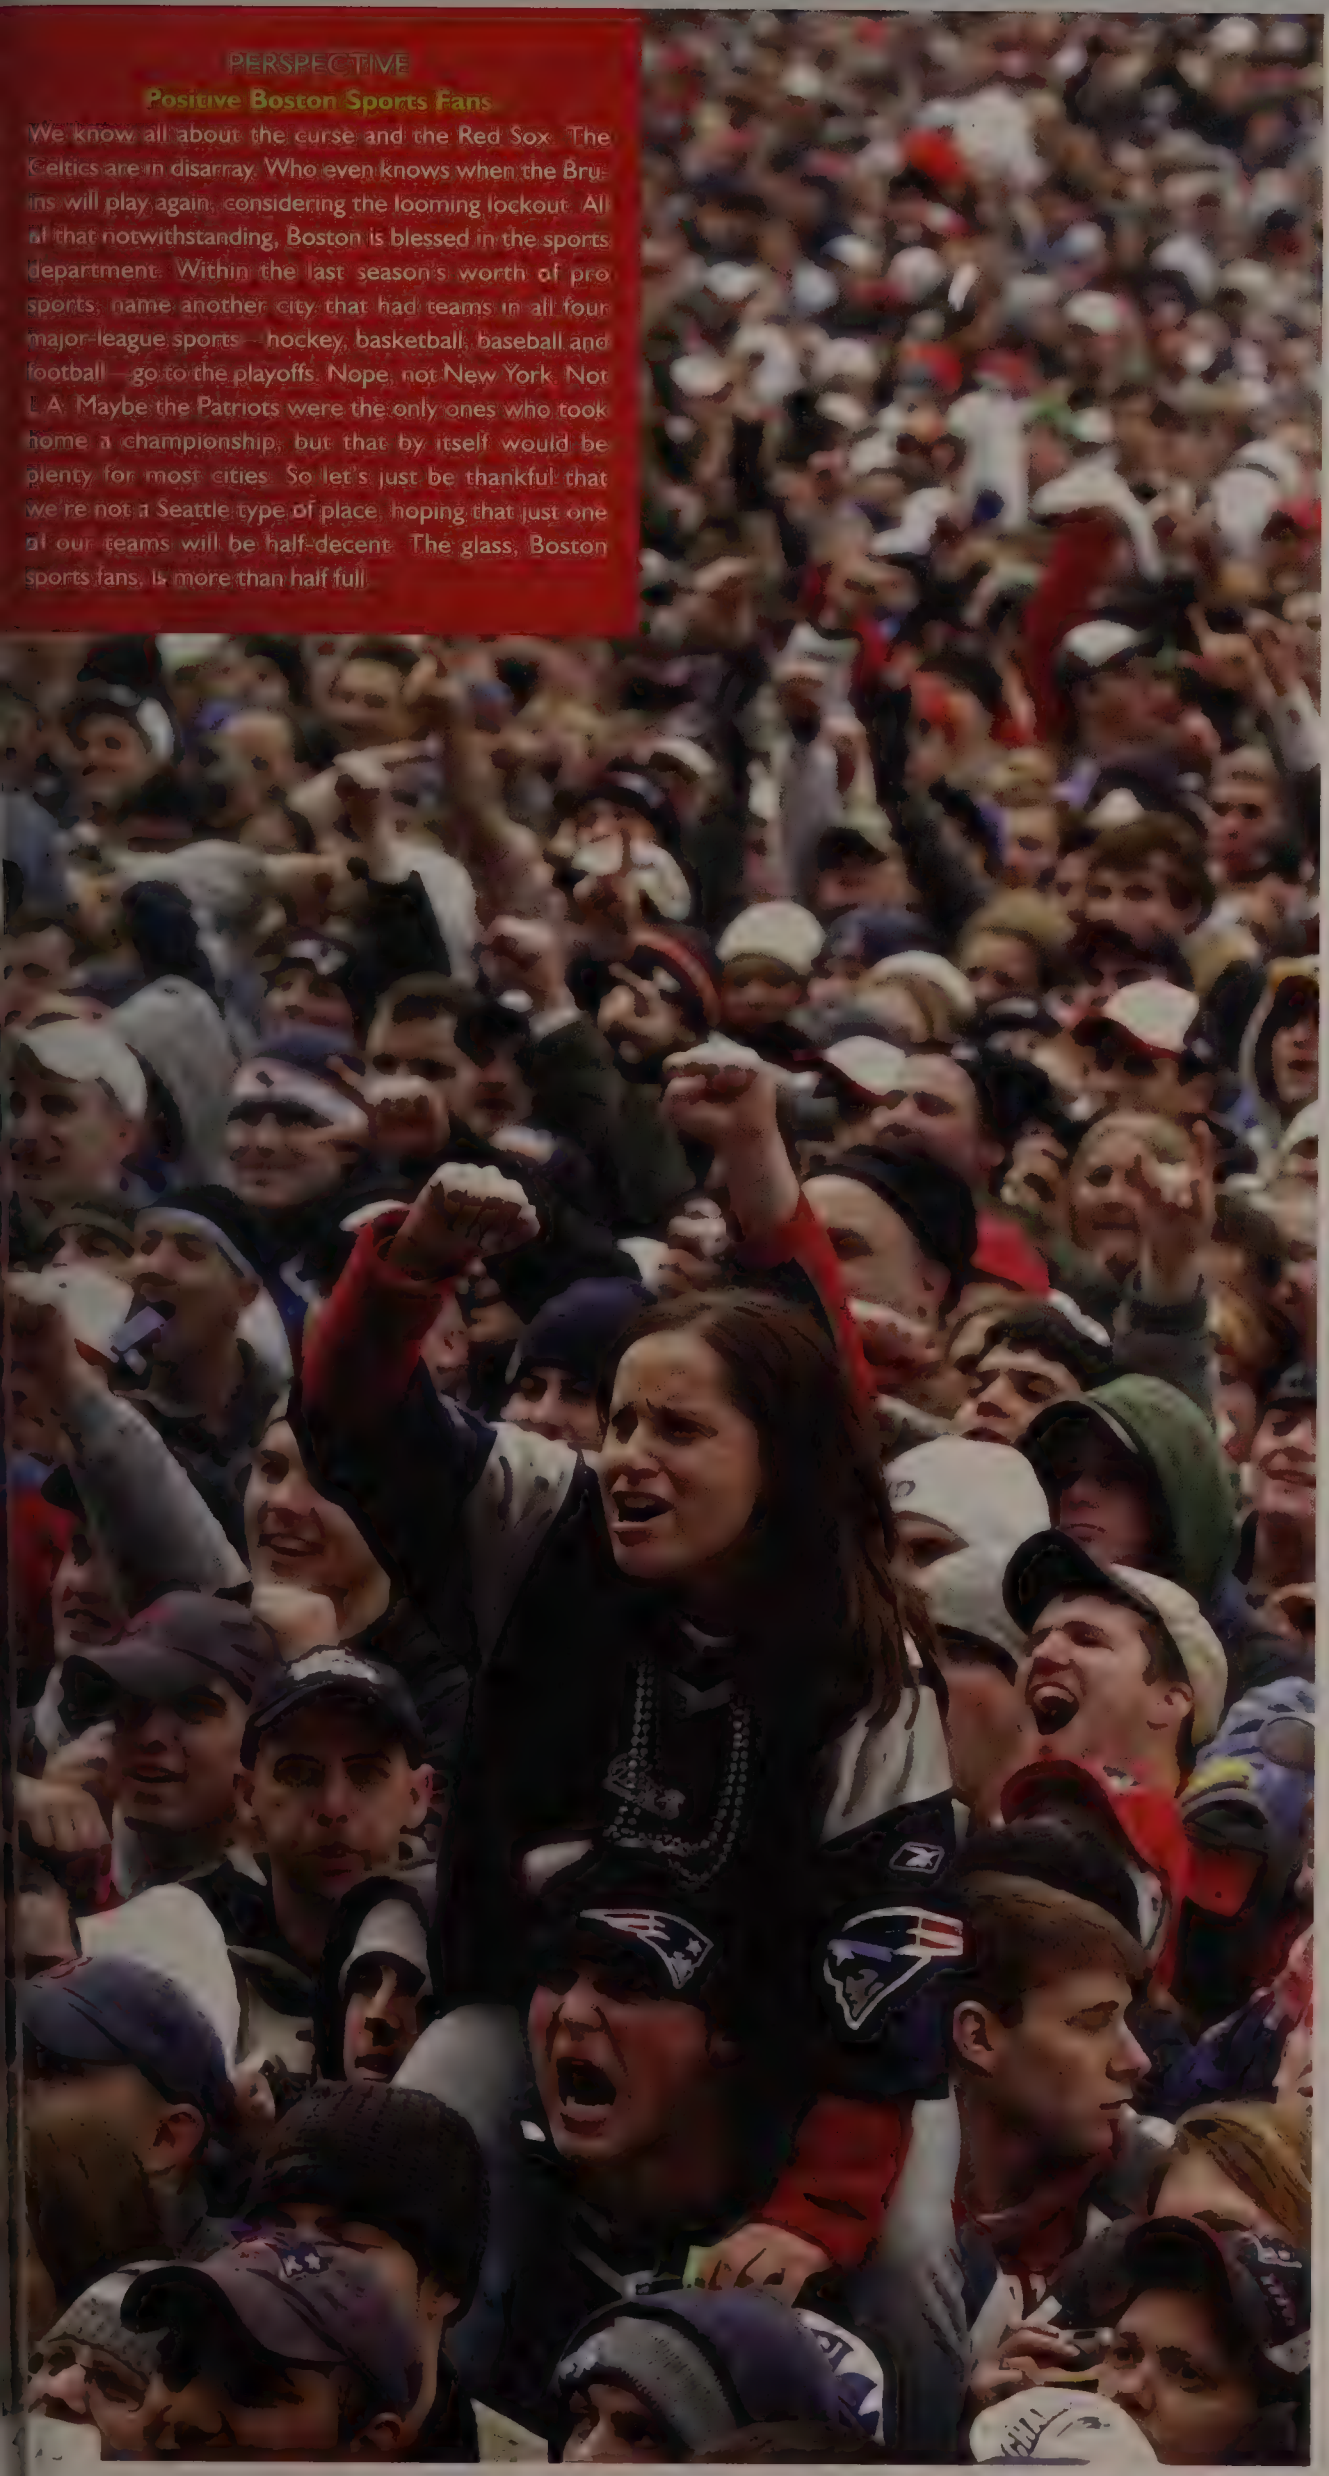
Ty Law hated the Patriots, hated Belichick, called the organization a bunch of liars. Then he abruptly changed his tune, and said he wants to finish his career as a Patriot. What happened? Who knows. But since Law has two more years on his contract, we're glad he's happy. Unless he's not, again.

CHOKE

Bruins First-Round Playoff Exit, Red Sox ALCS (tie)

It's hard to say which is worse: getting within five outs of reaching the final stage of an 85-year quest, and failing in the most heart-wrenching way possible, or losing in the first round of the playoffs when your team should've been good enough to make a legitimate bid for the title? The Red Sox were more stingingly disappointing, like bringing a winning Powerball ticket to the counter only to be told that you actually had the Megabucks numbers. The Bruins were a letdown in a different way, like Jennifer Grey's post–Dirty Dancing career. They seemed destined for such great things, but then the Habs gave them the metaphorical four-game nose job that screwed it all up. How about those Patriots, though?

CONTROVERSY



Any Danny Ainge Move

First Antoine Walker, the Celtics' second-best player, was shipped to Dallas. We didn't entirely agree with that move, but we could see the logic: spread out the offense among more players who take fewer shots apiece. Then, before we knew what was happening, Celtics executive director of basketball operations Danny Ainge basically traded the whc team for the 2002–2003 Cleveland Cavaliers, group of players that defined bad chemistry—ar bad play. OK, we understand that the team as it w could never win a title. But we have to think the pr Ainge Celtics were a hell of a lot closer to that g than the ragtag group we've got now. Coach Ji O'Brien's gone. Even the most logical (though st controversial) Ainge strategy—miss the playoffs a get a lottery pick—backfired, as the team made t playoffs despite their losing record and got smoked the first round, none of the players even looking li they wanted to be there.

INSPIRATIONAL ATHLETE

David Ortiz

David Ortiz gets the nod in this category not because he overcame any type of dramatic, life-threatening obstacle, but simply because he made the most of his opportunity when he finally got a chance to play every day. Before Shea Hillenbrand got shipped to Arizona at the end of May 2003, Ortiz had played in only 31 of the first 54 games of the season, batting .272 with two homers. Once he became part of the everyday lineup, however, he raised his average to .293 and hit 24 more homers the rest of the way. His clutch hits were too numerous to count (OK, he had 16 game-winning RBIs, only one behind league leaders Eric Chavez and Hideki Matsui), and he finished fifth in the American League Most Valuable Player voting. This season, he's on pace to have another stellar year, and he's signed a contract through 2006 (with a team option for 2007). There are a lot of contracts up in the air this year, but it's nice to know Poppy's grin will be lighting up the Sox dugout for years to come.

PERSPECTIVE

Positive Boston Sports Fans

We know all about the curse and the Red Sox. The Celtics are in disarray. Who even knows when the Bruins will play again, considering the looming lockout. All of that notwithstanding, Boston is blessed in the sports department. Within the last season's worth of pro sports, name another city that had teams in all four major-league sports — hockey, basketball, baseball and football — go to the playoffs. Nope, not New York. Not L.A. Maybe the Patriots were the only ones who took home a championship, but that by itself would be plenty for most cities. So let's just be thankful that we're not a Seattle type of place, hoping that just one of our teams will be half-decent. The glass, Boston sports fans, is more than half full.

ROOKIE

Andrew Raycroft

The Bruins' 24-year-old rookie goaltender stormed into the National Hockey League last year and immediately established himself as one of the game's top shot-stoppers. Among goalies who played in more than half of their team's games, Raycroft was third in the league in save percentage, at .926, and fourth in goals-against average, at 2.05. At the end of the season, Raycroft collected the Calder Memorial Trophy for NHL Rookie of the Year, beating out Montreal forward Michael Ryder. Now that he's secured a spot in the league, we just hope Raycroft has a league to play in after the Collective Bargaining Agreement expires in September.

MVP

Tom Brady and Rodney Harrison

Which one of these guys was more central to the Patriots' second Super Bowl title? That could be argued until snow is falling on Gillette Stadium tailgaters once again. So in the spirit of the Patriots' team-oriented philosophy, we're giving this award to the two leaders of the offense and defense. Both players faced skepticism at the beginning of the season. Was Brady capable of regaining his 2001–2002 championship form? Could Harrison possibly fill the void left by Lawyer Milloy? The answer was a resounding yes on both counts. By the end of the season, as the team's 15-win streak ran through the Super Bowl, Brady was being seriously compared with Joe Montana, and Harrison and company had made it clear that rumors of the death of the Pats D were greatly exaggerated.

NEW ADDITION

Curt Schilling

In a Red Sox season defined by new players who've had a fantastic impact (Pokey Reese and Keith Foulke, to name two), Schilling has been the marquee off-season pickup. Considering Pedro's inconsistency and D-Lowe's horrid start, we don't want to think about where the Sox might be if the Sheriff hadn't come to town. Besides his obvious skills on the mound, Schilling provides veteran leadership in the clubhouse and makes himself available to fans in a way that's almost unprecedented amongst Sox players (talking shop in the Sons of Sam Horn chat room, for instance). Plus, if we're going to watch a TV ad 100

FEMALE ATHLETE
Jessalyn Deveny

The Boston College women's basketball star led the Eagles to the 2004 Big East championship, with the team beating Syracuse, Miami and Connecticut in the process. A home-grown high-school standout (she was the 2001 USA Today Massachusetts Player of the Year), the junior guard has steadily refined her game over her college career, following up a 2003 award for Most Improved Player in the Big East with 2004 Most Outstanding Performer accolades for her play in the Big East tourney—where she averaged 18 points per game and shot 60.5 percent from the field. A consistently dangerous scorer, Deveny is also capable of busting out and taking over a game, as she did in January of last year when she dropped 36 points on Providence. What's in the future? There might be a WNBA team or two in need of just such a player.

MASTERMIND
Bill Belichick

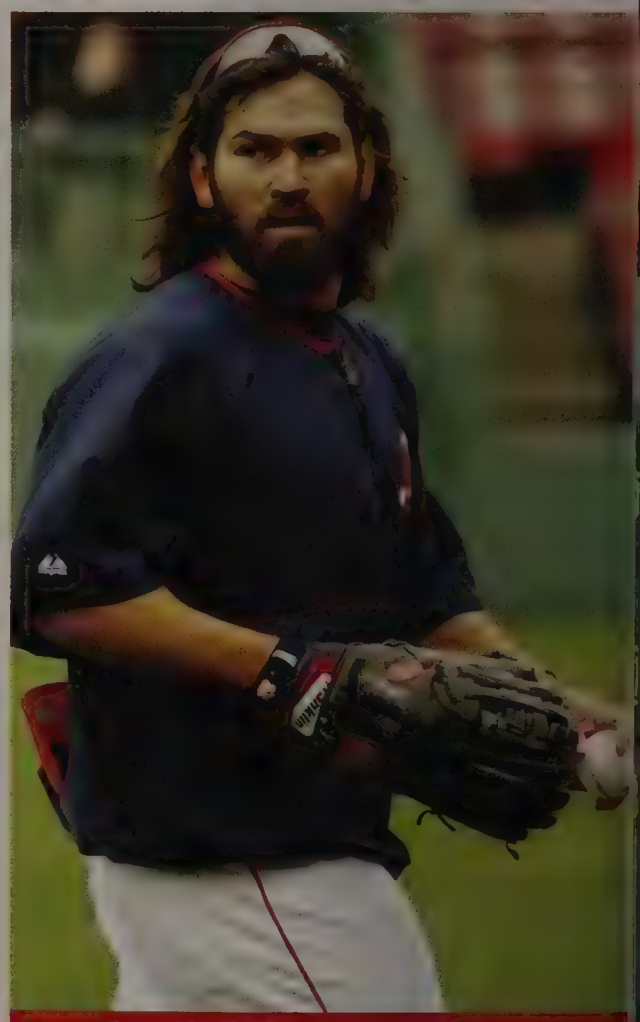
Hindsight is 20/20, so let's say we were totally behind the Lawyer Milloy thing right from the start. And we thought dealing Tebucky Jones for draft picks was a grand idea that would work out perfectly. OK, we're lying. On both counts, we wondered if Belichick was a saboteur (possibly sent from the Bills) on a mission to undermine the New England defense. Now we see, however, that he was but mad north-north-west: when the wind is southerly he knows a linebacker from a lateral. Rodney Harrison, Ty Law and talented younger players like Eugene Wilson anchored one of the most effective secondaries in football, while the huge salaries of Jones and Milloy got the broom. Meanwhile, one of those draft picks was subsequently traded to bring Corey Dillon—former owner of the NFL single-game rushing record—to New England, addressing the 2003–2004 team's biggest weakness: its running game. ESPN analyst Sean Salisbury called the deal "an absolutely unbelievable trade for the Patriots." With two Super Bowl rings, Belichick could trade Tom Brady for a tackle dummy and we'd say, "We can't wait to see where he's going with this."

times—as NESN viewers inevitably do—it might as well feature Schilling trying to master a Boston accent or getting ragged on by his kids.

SECRET WEAPON
Jason Varitek

OK, Red Sox Nation knows how good this guy is, but what about the rest of the baseball public? While Yankee counterpart Jorge Posada finished third in the 2003 American League MVP voting, 'Tek quietly put together his best season ever, hitting .273 with 25 home runs—mostly from the ninth spot of the most lethal offense ever assembled. Varitek also has a knack for delivering when the game's on the line, and his eight homers in the late innings of close games ranked third in the majors last season. Behind the plate, he's a calming influence on the often-emotional pitching staff, and he knows how to call a game—the over-under on how many times he gets shaken off during a game is probably around three. Hopefully the Sox will manage to sign him when his contract runs out at the end of the season, because there's nobody smarter when it comes to wearing the tools of ignorance.

TIME-WILL-TELL DEAL
Not Trading Nomar



We feel a little guilty now about how ready—OK, completely pumped—we were to trade the beloved Nomah in on a hot little number named Alex. We admit, we got a bad case of wandering eye, along with everyone else in Boston. But when the A-Rod deal fell through, Red Sox fans were left with Manny Ramirez and Nomar, still two of the best players in the game. If the Sox go all the way this year (which is as possible now as it's ever been) we'll be much happier to see Nomar spraying the Champagne than some mercenary. If they don't pull it off, get comfy and prepare for another winter of second-guessing.

TRADE
Vin Baker for Nobody

It could've been the NBA comeback story of the decade if Vin Baker stayed the course with his alcohol rehab program. A lean, quick and sober Baker showed up last fall and began the season looking like the All-Star player he once was. But midway through the season, Vin fell off the wagon, and by the end of the year he'd been dumped by the Celtics and claimed by the Knicks. We suppose that the only upside to this is that the Celtics were actually able to get rid of him, and now they can perhaps fill his spot in the lineup with a player who contributes to the team's success. Sorry it didn't work out, Vin, and good luck to you.

VILLAIN TWICE OVER
Aaron Boone

Aaron Boone, what to say about you? First, you hit the home run that cements your place amongst famous Red Sox scalawags, right alongside two guys with the word "Buck" in their names. Why, Aaron Boone, why did you have to choose that moment last October to stop being mediocre? Then, you blew out your knee playing basketball in the off-season, thus creating a job opening in the Yankees infield, which was subsequently filled with…you know who. God forbid you become a TV announcer—you'd probably fall out of the booth and land on Manny during the World Series. Red Sox fans, please join us and mail Aaron Boone a dollar, and maybe we can raise enough money to send him to live on the space station. There, his powers might not reach Yawkey Way. ⟷

MOST DIVINE DO
Johnny Damon

Damon's always gone his own way on the grooming front, electing not to "cowboy up" and shave his head last year when it seemed everyone from Grady Little to the Sausage Guy was sporting the rally-skull look. This year's early-homo sapiens/Jesus look has served him well, spawning a sect of Damon Disciple fans in the bleachers. Maybe he's just trying to increase the padding around his cranium in case he has another head-on collision with a second baseman, but if his resemblance to a certain 2,000-year-old carpenter results in a little divine intervention come October, Sox fans might start referring to the years after 2004 as AD—After Damon.

Bostonians on Reality TV

Why? Because they just don't seem to go away. At any given time you can find some Bostonian on some reality show; that's not surprising given the sheer number of programs these days. Some recent examples: Brian Worth from Average Joe 2, Randy from The Real World San Diego and Lawson Clarke, the Brookline copywriter who was the original straight guy to get Queer-Eyed in the pilot episode of Bravo's Big Gay Hit. What's unusual is that several Boston-bred reality show contestants haven't immediately faded into obscurity. Elisabeth Filarski (now Elisabeth Hasselbeck) graduated from Survivor: The Australian Outback to co-host The View. C.T. from The Real World Paris and Charlestown pal David Burns from The Real World Seattle continued having a pissah time in Acapulco in the The Real World/Road Rules Challenge: The Inferno. And let's not forg "Boston Rob" Mariano from Survivor: All-Stars, w showed the world that love is the greatest real show of all by proposing to winner Amber Brkich air. Yeah, our boy Rob is wicked smaaaht.

EXTERIOR DECORATOR

Jill Hunter and The Flamingo Wonder

West Newton artist Jill Hunter garnered plenty of press after festooning her lawn with plastic pink flamingos in the middle of a snowstorm last winter. Some neighbors proved anti-flamingo, but others supported her cause (whatever that may be) by borrowing birds for their own lawns. Soon, staid Newton had a touch of trailer-park glamour, with the random ersatz birds leavening the atmosphere over a miserable winter. The question now is, how will Hunter follow up the success of her flamingo fling? Shiny lawn globes? Fake wishing wells? Forget flamingos—we'd be most impressed if she put a few El Caminos up on blocks. Now that would be art.

Poster boy for the opposition to gay marria Finneran attempted to thwart the legalization same-sex marriage all the way through the proce including after the fact, when he doggedly suppor a law from 1913 that prohibited couples from out state from getting married in Massachusetts (which he received bipartisan support from Gover Romney). In the end, gays—including Finnera cousin, Maryellen O'Neil, and her partner, Lisa-A nette DiStefano—won the right to marry, and world remained on its axis. But don't hold y breath for an episode of Queer Eye for the Speake the House Guy.

LOCAL AUTHOR

Dennis Lehane

The Dorchester-bred author had five novels under belt before scoring his first smash with Mystic Ri which was subsequently turned into one of the m acclaimed films of 2003. Now that Lehane's a f time author, we hope we can expect more of the w textured characters and neighborhoods that ca pulted him to stardom. MOST MISSED

Michael Tye

The United Liquors CEO died last year of cance age 49, but managed to do a lot of good before his mature passing. In 1990, he helped found Com nity Servings, a meal delivery service for people w AIDS. He co-founded the Harbor to the Bay A bike ride and was a member of the board at Fen Community Health. And anyone who knew could talk your ear off about what a great guy he personally—funny, possessed of boundless energy loved by his family. The Greater Boston Busi Council posthumously honored Tye with a Lifet Achievement Award, a testament to a man who complished so much on behalf of others and pack century's worth of living into 49 years.

The Waterfront

nce upon a time, say, three or four years ago, revelers alking from South Station to one of Harpoon Brew-y's frequent beer bashes would've found themselves aversing a wasteland of empty lots and vast parking eas. These days, the area around the World Trade enter is filling up, with a building or a piece of infra-ructure seeming to appear just about every time we ok. The Boston Convention & Exhibition Center is e largest and most obvious new resident, but there's so a new hotel, a Silver Line stop, office buildings, a otel/condo complex that will wrap around the ugly g Dig ventilation system, and a new home for the In-tute of Contemporary Art. And once it's all done, u'll still be able to get some of the freshest beer in wn a little further down Northern Avenue.

O'Toole also instituted some minor policy changes gned to improve morale, such as allowing AM-FM os in cruisers and removing the ban on turtlenecks ich means you may soon be pulled over by a guy who wants to bum a French cigarette and talk about de-struction). But as the police picket lines at the tCenter demonstrated, O'Toole has serious prob-s on her hands, including a group of employees who en't had a raise since 1999. How O'Toole deals with big-picture challenges of her high-pressure job is

PLACE TO GET ROMANTIC

If you're eschewing the dinner-and-movie date template and want to take a walk, throw a frisbee or have a picnic, you'll seem quite the in-the-know urbanite if you make the 60-acre Larz Anderson Park your destination. The top of the park's towering hill, off Newton Street in Brookline, gives a clear view of the Boston skyline, and the grassy slope tumbles down to a picturesque pond. The grounds also host an imposing mansion filled with antique cars, the Larz Anderson Auto Museum. But, to paraphrase a certain drug ad, don't get carried away. If quiet time at Larz Anderson turns into lovin' time, A pair of lovebirds once found out the hard way that the grounds' bushes also contain plenty of poison ivy.

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWSPAPER

The Dorchester Reporter

After last year's Boston's Best issue, we were chided by the Dorchester Reporter for a "bias" against the restaurants of the city's largest neighborhood. The evidence admittedly was compelling. "In its food and drink section there are 65 categories, with Dorchester going zero for 65," the paper's Aug. 21, 2003, editorial read. If we dissed Dorchester's dining scene, we don't want to make the same mistake about its community newspaper, which, as its slogan accurately claims, reflects "the News and Values Around the Neighborhood." Led by the crack father-son team of publisher Ed Forry and managing editor Bill Forry (in photo above) and young news editor Jim O'Sullivan, the Reporter—founded in 1983 by Ed and his wife, Mary—combines thorough coverage of neighborhood news, diverse voices on its op-ed page, and compelling reporting. Recent features have included a thoughtful profile of State Representative Martin Walsh and a moving tribute to 22-year-old Army Sgt. Danny Londono, a Dorchester resident who died in Iraq in March. Dorchester may not be the first neighborhood we consider for fine dining, but it's our first choice for fine local reporting.

ARTS COLUMNIST

Renee Graham, Boston Globe

Whether defending Bill Cosby from the fallout over his controversial remarks on race ("harsh" but "right on target") or defining the phenomenon of Madonna ("[for] 20 years a gaudy triumph of spectacle over talent"), the Globe's Renee Graham is as street-savvy and eloquent as anyone writing about pop culture in America today. Graham looks at the big picture, suggesting hypocrisy in a public that allows the career of R. Kelly to flourish following child pornography charges while rejecting George Michael over a "restroom mishap" that is "akin to a parking ticket." Of this year's KISS 108 concert, Graham wrote that teen star Avril Lavigne's posing made her look "bored" and "old," and praised the "vigor" and "enthusiasm" of '80s icon Cyndi Lauper. Schooled in music from Morrissey to Missy Elliott, and equally comfortable commenting on a new release by the Cure and a recent festival of Celtic music, Graham brushes aside labels and focuses the only thing that really matters: the art.

BURY-THE-HATCHET JOB

Monica Collins and Emily Rooney Kiss and Make Up

We know time heals all wounds, but was that re Boston Herald columnist (and former Emily Roo target) Monica Collins we saw on Rooney's "Beat Press" panel on WGBH-TV's Greater Boston? It after all, just seven years ago that Rooney, in th very pages, responded to a negative review of show by describing Collins as "jealous of people are more attractive and slimmer than she is." B then, Rooney's personal attack was the talk of town. Now, it seems, she's decided, if you can't b 'em, co-opt 'em.

BUSINESS COLUMNIST

Steve Bailey, Boston Globe

Steve Bailey's column, Downtown, would be as m at home in the Globe's Living section as it is in Business section—a testament to its readability e for those who wouldn't know a bottom line fro bustline. In fact, Bailey's flip, take-no-prisoners s has made him something of a business page book to Living/Arts enfant terrible Alex Beam. An eq opportunity antagonist to management (Veri Bank of America) and labor (Service Employees ternational Union), Bailey maintains an indepen stance that has made his column unpredictable, c ible, required reading.

TV NEWS ANCHOR

Lisa Hughes, WBZ-4

If our selection of Lisa Hughes for this category seemed premature back in 2001—she came to WBZ in 2000—today, it can only be seen as forward-thinking. Though viewership for most of WBZ's newscasts remains lodged in last place, the 11 pm weekday edition, which Hughes co-anchors along with the 4 and 6 pm newscasts, often climbs ahead of rival WCVB-5 in the all-important 25–54 age bracket. Amiable but substantial, Hughes is fast becoming a fixture of Boston television.

MEDIA MEA CULPA

The Boston Globe's Iraqi Sex Photo Scandal

Your paper of record wants you to know it is sorry—very, very sorry. "It is an understatement to say that the Globe erred when it ran a photo that, if you look closely, showed images of men dressed as soldiers having sex with unidentified women," wrote Ombudsman Christine Chinlund following an earlier act of contrition from editor Martin Baron. "It is also an understatement to say the paper regrets the error." On the plus side, nobody—not Chinlund, Baron or any of the other staffers quoted—sounded the least bit defensive. On the other hand, it would be difficult to imagine a positive spin for this debacle, from the lack of simple authentication to the complete failure of the chain of command to notice it was publishing a sexually explicit photograph. "There should have been a lot of checks and balances," Photography Director Catie Aldrich acknowledged, "and for whatever reason, there weren't." Something tells us the next front-page-bound photograph that depicts a scene more worthy of Penthouse will receive a bit more scrutiny.

RADIO SHOW

Matty in the Morning*, KISS 108

How often do you listen to a music station and find the songs distracting? We can get more than our fix of Britney and matchbox twenty anywhere, but the chemistry between Matt Siegel and company—especially news and entertainment director/human Rolodex Billy Costa—is what makes the KISS 108 morning crew Boston's best substitute for a crowing-at-the-crack-of-dawn rooster. The lively interviews are another draw: Within the past year, Matty's bantered with entertainers like Sex and the City's Cynthia Nixon, the Sox' Nomar Garciaparra and even political heavyweights like John Kerry. For a morning wake-up, it works just as well as a java jolt.

RADIO TALK SHOW HOST

David Brudnoy, WBZ-AM

It's unlikely that David Brudnoy would feel he deserves recognition for the simple act of showing up for work. Yet the treatment for his latest medical malady, a rare form of skin cancer, made the simple into the heroic. (An ironic side effect was the disappearance of Brudnoy's voice—a loss which, thankfully, turned out to be temporary.) On his nightly WBZ show, Brudnoy engages his guests in civil but spirited discussion of issues cultural and political, local and national, and he refuses to condescend to his audience. In the loud, rude, crude medium that commercial talk radio has become, Brudnoy continues to offer an intelligent eloquence that we could ill afford to see permanently silenced.

REVOLVING DOOR

Comings and Goings (and Comings) at the Boston Herald

Former managing editor Andrew Gully and former editor Andy Costello are out. Past executive editor Ken Chandler is back in, now as editorial director. Outlaw columnist Mike Barnicle, long ago banished from the Globe, emerges at the very paper that once hastened his journalistic downfall. TV columnist Monica Collins and political reporter Wayne Woodlief are shown the door, then promptly rehired in freelance roles. These days, we need a program to track the cast of characters at One Herald Square. Perhaps the ghost of dearly departed theater critic Elliott Norton is waiting in the wings…

TV NEWS METEOROLOGIST

Harvey Leonard, WCVB-5

We haven't done a thorough analysis to determine if Harvey Leonard's forecasts are more accurate than other meteorologists'. We doubt WCVB did either before poaching Leonard from rival WHDH-7 two years ago. No matter. In a business where perception often supercedes reality, Leonard's relative lack of histrionics (with the exception of the occasional breathless tease) gives him an image of credibility that he deserves. Apparently, the New England Emmy Awards Association agrees that Leonard's top-of-the-line: It has made him a two-time winner for outstanding achievement in television weathercasting.

TV SPORTS ANCHOR

Bob Lobel

When Paula Lyons was dismissed from her long-time role as consumer reporter at WBZ-4, one had to wonder if the days were numbered for fellow station veterans like Bob Lobel. Yet Lobel's stature only seems to increase with time. In addition to serving as WBZ's sports anchor Sunday through Thursday evenings and anchoring WSBK-38's Nightcast sports desk, Lobel hosts NESN's Boston Globe: Sportsplus (a panel discussion with players, sportswriters and broadcasters) and WBZ's Sunday night week-in-review roundup, Sports Final. With his breadth of knowledge, grasp of athletic history and unfailing pa sion, Lobel is simply the New England sports televisio world's MVP.

VIEW OF BOSTON FROM HOLLYWOOD

The Practice

Many sitcoms and dramas have been set in Boston ov the years, from Cheers and St. Elsewhere to Boston Pu lic and Crossing Jordan. Most may as well be set Cleveland, for all the local flavor they offer. Only o casionally does Boston play a major role. The first I PROPER award for a Hollywood series with a genui Boston accent goes to Belmont boy David E. Kelle law drama. Sure, Ally McBeal and Boston Public a pretty generic, but The Practice is as real as it ge chock-full of specific local settings and references. F a key story arc of the series' eighth and final seaso Dedham took center stage. The Practice is such Boston booster that we'd lament the loss of face ti were it not for next fall's Boston Legal, a Practice spin set at One Fleet Street that could do for the North E what The Sopranos did for New Jersey. ⟶

FACE FOR RADIO ON TELEVISION

Doug "VB" Goudie

It's little surprise that the main claim to fame of Fox 25's Dou "VB" Goudie prior to his current gig as morning news commen tator was as host of The Pit, a nightly talk show on WRKO-AM Goudie is, how you say, "radio-genic," not just in his appearanc but in his presentation. If the idea was to provide a rough-around the-edges alternative to the network morning shows, Fox 25 ha found its answer to Matt Lauer.

How many angels can dance on the head of a pin? Pose that philosophical riddle to the new owners of the Boston Red Sox — they'll be new for a few more years yet — and they'd probably get their architect to work on an answer straight away. The triumvirate of owners has managed to squeeze hundreds of extra seats into — and extra dollars out of — the lyric little bandbox off Lansdowne Street. The 274 Green Monster–capping seats added last year (including 100 standing-room slots) were followed by the right field rooftop experiment that opened this season, which added another 191 seats plus standing-room space for 100. Both developments have been well received, which probably means that before long the Sox will be selling tickets to sit on the Citgo sign — and that they'll still be calling Fenway home when the park's 100th birthday rolls around in 2012.

BIGGEST CRASH

Putnam Investments

For a few weeks last fall, investors were yanking money out of Putnam Investments fast enough to bring to mind the bank run on George Bailey's building and loan in It's a Wonderful Life. In the last quarter of 2003, word got out that Putnam's traders were basically using investors' mutual funds to play markets around the world, and investors large and small pulled $54 billion from the firm's highly regarded funds. Putnam finally managed to stop the bleeding by striking a settlement agreement with regulators to stop the after-hours shenanigans and pay $110 million—half of it to investors and half to regulators. Other fund managers have since paid larger fines, and all told, the mutual fund industry has doled out more than $2 billion in fines and restitution, but Putnam gets credit for breaking the ice.

MOST ANTICIPATED LOCAL EXPANSION

Ikea

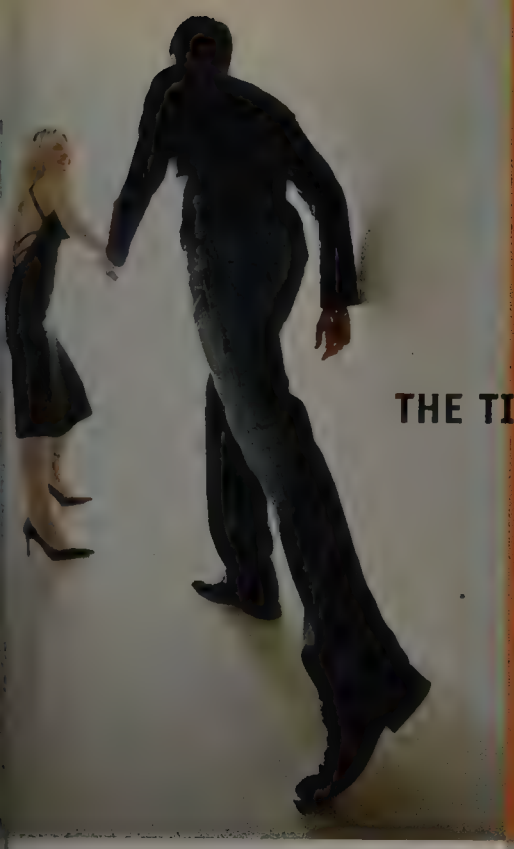
Ikea is coming! Heard that before, you say? Believe it when you see it? Well, if you had all but given up hope on being able to buy snap-together home furnishings from Sweden in Greater Boston during your lifetime, cheer up. The company announced plans in April to build a store in Stoughton that will generate more than 400 jobs and over a million dollars in tax revenue. It also agreed to foot the bill for constructing a new access road to ease traffic congestion. So it's full steam ahead for Stoughton and dead in the water for Somerville, where the furniture chain was set to open in 2002 as the linchpin of a plan to revitalize the Assembly Square Mall. Despite the fact that the company offered to build a waterfront park for the community in addition to the spanking new retail operation, the development-phobic (pronounced progress-averse) Mystic View Task Force nixed the idea, and the legal wrangling isn't scheduled to be resolved until 2006. And people wonder why Somerville's the butt of so many jokes.

MOST CONTROVERSIAL NEW BUSINESS

Gay Wedding Planners

For all the ground they've broken, gay marriages have so far been utilitarian affairs. Marriages on the steps of Cambridge City Hall pack plenty of symbolic wallop, but the business of gay weddings has only just begun. Many Boston-area wedding planners have made it known they can handle "nontraditional" wedding ceremonies and receptions, but some, like It's About Time Weddings, are going further and specializing in organizing gay, lesbian and transgender unions. Its packages range from the last-minute (the Oscar Wilde) to the lavish (the Alexander the Great). The Roslindale-based firm promises "carefully screened, gay-owned and gay-friendly" vendors, and on each client couple's one-year anniversary, It's About Time makes a donation in their names to G & Lesbian Advocates & Defenders (GLAD). Th can't promise that the big day won't be crashed protesters, but they could probably think of a way work them into the festivities.

MOST PROMISING START-UP (PRACTICAL CATEGORY)



Peppercoin

Move aside microbrews, it's time for micropaymer Waltham-based Peppercoin thinks it has a better v for people to buy music downloads, magazine artic and other Web content with prices too small to w rant whipping out the credit card for each separ purchase. Normally, transaction fees make offer such low-priced content to customers via credit c unprofitable. Peppercoin's payment-processing pl form aggregates small transactions across multi companies, customers and payment providers to duce transaction costs. Of course, many others h tried similar systems, but Peppercoin has a str pedigree (Ron Rivest—the "R" in highly regar RSA Security—is a co-founder), a freshly refil bank account thanks to a $4.25 million initial rou of venture capital, and a growing list of brand-na clients, including the Smithsonian Institution. P percoin is also getting plenty of press—Red Her magazine recently named the company one of private firms developing the next wave of big te nology advances.

president was very public indeed and must have made thousands of alumni a little squeamish about dropping their annual donation in the mail. In the end, BU was left at the altar by former NASA director Daniel Goldin, who was deemed best of the best and agreed to be the university president, and then abruptly changed his mind a day before taking office. The reason for Goldin's costly pirouette (BU doled him out a whopping $1.8 million in severance pay), to the surprise of virtually no one, can be boiled down to two words: John Silber. Apparently the prospect of squaring off with the acerbic chancellor was more frightening even than sending men and women into space. The final frontier indeed.

SCHMOOZE JOB
Massport–Virgin Airlines

File this one under: To schmooze and lose is better than to never schmooze at all. The Massachusetts Port Authority (Massport) rolled out the red carpet in the hope of landing Virgin Airlines' new U.S. headquarters and the 1,400 jobs that come with it. The agency lined up some $1.5 million in economic incentives and cobbled together an array of office space for the company in Southie and East Boston. And Virgin's location scouts were given a tour of the town's hot spots. But after months of waiting on pins and needles, Beantown had its bubble rudely popped in early June when Richard Branson, the airline's flamboyant founder, revealed that New York—New York!—and San Francisco were finalists to land the offices.

TECH TURNAROUND
EMC Corp.

Two years ago, Hopkinton-based data storage firm EMC was a poster child for the tech bust. It posted a near billion-dollar quarterly loss in October 2001 and grabbed a spot on the couch at the dot-com pity party, handing out pink slips by the fistful. A massive, campus-style headquarters long in the planning stages looked like it would become an I-495 ghost town before construction even began. But what a difference a few years makes. Data concerns—disaster fears and regulation among the reasons—have put EMC back in vogue. The company threw enough stock and cash around to buy three large software firms in the second half of last year, shaking off its image as a maker only of big, boxy hardware. The profits are flowing again, the headquarters is back on track, and EMC is hiring again, growing its workforce by 15 percent in 2003.

Holosonics founder Dr. F. Joseph Pompei is one of thos people who relishes the idea of being told that somethin is impossible. That's exactly what happened when he em barked on a self-designed, physics-based program while graduate school at MIT. Most of the professors though Pompei's idea — to develop technology that would allow "beams" of sound to be heard by listeners in one part of room but not others — would fail. But Pompei persiste and MIT relented. A couple of years of around-the-cloc work in the MIT Media Lab later, Pompei had not only technology but a business. Now, his Watertown firm makes sound systems for concerts, museums and trad shows. And in a development that could revolutionize th long car trek, in-car systems that enable multiple passen gers to listen to their own music selections — without headphones — are on the way (one's on display at Disney Epcot Center).

WELCOME HOME
Macworld

Headline: Boston beats New York. It's true. OK, maybe no in the way we'd hoped, but a victory is a victory. The Ea Coast version of Macworld, born in Boston in the 1980 moved to the Big Apple in 1998. The news that the exp of geeks with attitude would return to Boston starting th summer was a major coup for convention-starved local off cials and a shot in the arm for the new convention cente But the victory came with a hitch: Apple Computer itse arguably the raison d'etre for the convention, said it wou stay away. Macworld will help ease Beantown into hos with-the-most mode—less than two weeks after th techies leave, the Democrats sidle into town. ⟶

BIGGEST EXECUTIVE WINDFALL
Chad Gifford, Fleet

They say it's good to be king. But if you aren't born into royalty, being CEO is a good fallback position. Recession or not, 2003 was a good time to be chief in Massachusetts, especially if your company happened to be sold. Several Fleet executives got golden parachutes when the merger with Bank of America hit, but none glittered more brightly than CEO Chad Gifford's. Gifford scored a windfall of nearly $11 million in salary, bonuses and stock options. Not bad considering that the year before, Gifford's modest $992,000 salary was augmented with a $6 million cash bonus and $3.8 million worth of stock and options. Mergers have been very, very good to Gifford, who was rewarded with $11.1 million worth of stock when Fleet bought BankBoston. Other Bay State CEOs made more in 2003—including Staples boss Ron Sargent, who had a total compensation package of $16.9 million—but Gifford's bonus gave him bragging rights in this category.

BIGGEST FALL
FleetBoston to Bank of America

Just when we were getting used to calling the building where the Bruins and Celtics play the FleetCenter, another bank merger threatens to throw yet another monkey wrench in the local lexicon. This time it's Fleet—buyer of BankBoston in the last local financial mega-merger back in 1999—being scooped up by Bank of America in a deal worth $47 billion. Nationwide, around 12,500 Fleet workers will get axed as a result, but only time will tell exactly what it means to have a North Carolina bank running one of the Hub's biggest institutions. As for the FleetCenter, what's wrong with doing the retro thing and calling it the Garden again? After all, neither of the teams that play there has had even a sniff at a championship since the old one was torn down.

ANTIQUE STORE

Cambridge Antique Market

201 Msgr. O'Brien Highway, Cambridge, 617-868-9655, www.marketantique.com

This five-story shop proves that antiquing isn't just for grannies. Boasting a dizzying array of items, from high-end 18th-century French armoires to 1930s art deco glassware, Cambridge Antiques is a mecca for treasure hunters of any generation. More than 150 dealers display their wares, which are replenished frequently. Forget the stereotype of the dusty, cramped antiques store—the shop's five spacious and well-organized floors make browsing through the vintage furniture, tchotchkes, clothing and jewelry enjoyable even for allergic claustrophobes. And regardless of whether your aesthetic is Shaker minimalism or rococo splendor, or whether you have $5 or $5,000 to spend, you'll find something that strikes your fancy. That's why, on any given day, the clientele ranges from hip, blue-haired college students to blue-haired old ladies with hip replacements. Luckily for legs of all ages, the shop itself isn't too antique to have an elevator.

ART SUPPLIES

Pearl Arts & Crafts

579 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-547-6600, www.pearlpaint.com.

A multimedia wonderland that sells everything from glitter and popsicle sticks to sable brushes and gold leaf supplies. All the supplies the creative soul might need can be found on its three colorful floors, or else the staff knows where to locate it. Accordingly, the aisles are always crowded with all manner of artistic types, from spattered painters and clay-smudged sculptors to multiply pierced graffiti artists and morose-looking art students. Most of the employees are artists themselves and therefore know what they're talking about. Even if your last artistic endeavor was making a gimp keychain at summer camp, you'll walk out of Pearl ready to unleash your inner Picasso.

104 Mount Auburn St., Cambridge, 617-492-4411;
14 Needham St., Newton, 617-964-4411;
other locations; www.tweeter.com

Since opening its first store in Harvard Square in 1972, Tweeter's come a long way. The now-nationwide chain (with 15 Massachusetts locations) stocks whatever you might need in the way of home and car entertainment—and extensively trains its salespeople before they set foot on the floor. Looking to amp up your car's audio system or upgrade to a plasma-screen TV? Want to start a career as a documentarian with a new camcorder or surprise your significant other with a new DVD player? Tweeter's employees will hook you up with the technology you need. Though their prices are competitive, the quality of their merchandise is incomparable. Unlike other large chains that carry low-end to mid-priced items, Tweeter stocks only mid- to high-end goods. Brands include Sony, Bose, Panasonic, Sharp and Samsung, and the shelves are stacked with enough equipment to make your home worthy of MTV Cribs and your car the equal of anything on Pimp My Ride.

BOOKSTORE, LOCAL

Newtonville Books

296 Walnut St., Newton, 617-244-6619, www.newtonvillebooks.com

This tiny shop is a Bermuda Triangle for Boston's bibliophiles: We've known people who've entered and never been heard from again. Well, not quite, but Newtonville Books' extensive stacks do offer a wonderful place to lose yourself for an afternoon, and the dedicated staff loves to chat with customers, offering candid reviews and insightful suggestions. In fact, the atmosphere is more like a much-loved home library than a retail operation, and owner Tim Huggins tailors the inventory to appeal to an erudite clientele with wide-ranging tastes. Self-published works share shelf space with bestsellers and signed first editions. Unlike most booksellers, Huggins says he doesn't offer discounts on bestsellers because doing so encourages consumers to base their picks on price rather than content—a boon to emerging authors and the readers who might not otherwise discover them. Huggins keeps his smaller customers in mind too: This summer, he's turning the space next door into the Lizard's Tale, a bookstore that stocks only kid lit.

BOOKSTORE, USED

Brattle Book Shop

9 West St., Boston, 617-542-0210, www.brattlebookshop.com

If you prefer your books dog-eared and previously loved, the three-story Brattle is the bookstore for you. The inventory ranges from back issues of Life magazine to forgotten pulp novels to leather-bound, collectible first-editions, and the bookworms browsing the aisles look like kids in a candy store. Every week, staffers appraise and purchase thousands of books, many of which find their way onto the charming outdoor shelves and stands in the vacant lot next door (where all books are $5 or less). At the extreme other end of the spectrum are rare and understandably more costly items, like a three-page handwritten letter by J.R.R. Tolkien explaining his reasons for writing The Lord of the Rings, or a first edition of Thoreau's Walden. There's more than enough middle ground, however, and the helpful and enthusiastic staff will point you in the right direction whether you want to replace your lost copy of Valley of the Dolls or find a signed edition by Hemingway.

CATERING

Max Ultimate Food

100 Magazine St., Boston, 617-427-9799, www.maxultimatefood.com.

Many of the most memorable parties in Boston owe a good deal of their charm to this catering company's fantastic and wildly creative food. If you want swanky, they can do a six-course feast worthy of Escoffier. Or if you want fun, they can provide deliciously decadent carnival fare. Themes from a traditional New England clambake to an Asian luau are no problem—and every detail will be spot-on. At one recent fund-raiser, the dessert offerings ranged fro South Beach Diet—fruit, berries and healthy stuff- to Revere Beach Diet—Twinkies, Ring Dings a Devil Dogs. The presentation is always imaginativ from waitresses in outrageous outfits to a martini b where the flavors correspond with jellybeans, and t super-friendly, upbeat staff seem to have as much f as the invited guests. Imagine if the Cat in the H had exquisite taste and were a superb chef.

CAR WASH

Allston Car Wash

434 Cambridge St., Allston, 617-254-3200, www.allstoncarwash.com

Not all car washes are created equal, as this 28-ye old "spa for your cah" has proven. Renowned for speedy service and competitive prices (as well as c ative advertising), this combination car wash, gas s tion and convenience store is also eco-friendly. D ing his just-finished two-year tenure as president the New England Car Wash Association, own Chuck Delaney focused on educating consume about the environmental benefits of professional c washing, and in 2001, he installed a water-recla system that reduced the facility's use of fresh water 80 percent. Equally involved in the community, t company has also raised over $28,000 for Allsto Franciscan Children's Hospital. Perhaps its great public service, however, is that—in addition to reg lar washes and interior and exterior detailing—it fers time-release air freshening treatments ($2) th eliminate the need for those tacky scented trees da gling from the rearview mirror. For that alone, A ston Car Wash deserves our undying gratitude.

COOKING STORE

Williams-Sonoma

The Atrium, 300 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill, 617-928-01
other locations; www.williams-sonoma.com

Say what you will about the malling of America. T ubiquitous, albeit high-end, chain of cooking sto can provide everything you need to emulate Bob Flay or Mario Batali. Everything except the tale that is. But with the soup-to-nuts equipment ava able for making soufflés, crepes and other culinary lights, talent may not even be necessary. For the s ous chef, Williams-Sonoma stocks specialty foods a spices as well as highly specialized gadgets, top- the-line cookware and an encyclopedic collection cookbooks. For those more focused on presentati there's also a wealth of table settings, linens, crock and glassware. The store's exhaustive inventory v remind everyone from dilettantes to Cordon B graduates of the joy of cooking.

FflorIst

Ilex Designs

78 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-422-0300, www.ilexflowers.com

Boston is blessed with numerous outstanding florists, but the only rea- not to give this new kid on the block a try is if you're scared of aying from the traditional. Since opening Ilex this past Valentine's y, co-owners Carol Sharp and Andrew Anderson have made a name themselves by thinking outside the box, or vase. For example, for upcoming wedding in a room with contemporary architecture and o-story windows, they eschewed the romantic pedestals-and-urns mat and created striking, minimalist floral designs within 8-foot xiglass containers. Ilex's one-of-a-kind studio (a salon-like room hin the store has a 60-inch table and a digital projector) facilitates kind of communication between florist and client that's necessary ull off such individualized designs. Sharp and Anderson also work l with caterers, event planners and other party professionals, inte- ing flowers into an event's overall aesthetic, and they offer their nts the chance to try out different designs before committing to . In other words, while Ilex pursues its own unique muse, cus- er satisfaction remains the top priority.

stands that couriers are often entrusted with valuable materials, he worked with Mayor Menino to implement the city's policy requiring that couriers be licensed. His emphasis on customer service, meanwhile, makes his company the courier of choice for everyone from businessmen to baseball stars: Two summers ago, when Toronto Blue Jay Joe Lawrence left his suitcase in Boston, a City Express messenger brought it to the team's hotel in New York, before the players even arrived. Quicker than a Blue Jay? Now that's what we call fast.

ENTERTAINMENT STORE

Virgin Megastore

360 Newbury St., Boston, 617-896-0950, www.virginmega.com

One glimpse of this three-floor, 40,000-square-foot superstore packed with music, movies, books, games and clothing, and it's obvious that Virgin Group founder and CEO Richard Branson sees entertainment as serious business. In the past year, Virgin has added electronic accessories, and in-store appearances by big-name and up-and-coming artists add sizzle to the experience of shopping there, while monthly sales make it palatable even to tightwads. Stop by on a Thursday and experience the store's new partnership with the dance club Rise, which highlights the retailer's extensive dance music and vinyl selection by bringing in a DJ to spin during lunch hour. If you're hungry, head to the café on the third floor. In fact, the only thing that prevents us from moving all of our personal belongings in and calling the Virgin Megastore home is that the salespeople might freak out when we change into our pajamas.

FURNITURE, HIGH-END

Montage

75 Arlington St., Boston, 617-451-9400,
www.montageweb.com

At the end of last year, co-owners Liz and Chris Bates decided to close their 20-year-old showroom at the Boston Design Center to focus their expertise and energy on this elegant (and at 10,500 square feet, much roomier) space. If customer satisfaction and corporate interest are any indication, they made the right choice: 90 percent of their clientele are repeat customers, and the gallery has been used as a backdrop for a photo shoot by Bose. The showroom's sophisticated yet comfortable designs are mostly European (this fall, look for new designs from the Milan Furniture Fair), but they do make room for particularly innovative American designers like Antoine Proulx. Employees well versed in architecture and design work with clients and decorators to create interiors that are equally livable and breathtaking. The showroom hosts frequent talks by designers like Jeffrey Bilhuber, and the owners are eager to share their high-style design concepts with the general public, even those who might be intimidated by their high prices.

GIFT BOUTIQUE

Aunt Sadie's

18 Union Park St., Boston, 617-357-7117, www.auntsadiesonline.com

At most stores, you wouldn't expect to find martini glasses and baby gifts sharing shelf space, but incongruity and quirkiness are part of the charm at this laid-back South End boutique. In addition to an ever-changing inventory of witty cards, soaps, beauty products, unique decorative items, and cheeky gifts for men, women, children and pets, Sadie's offers its own line of scented candles in flavors like chocolate, lemonade and suntan lotion. (These popular Candles-in-a-Can come in tins decorated with everything from vintage postcards to tongue-in-cheek interpretations of astrological signs.) The shop's atmosphere and staff are just as inviting and delightful as the products—as you browse, the store's layout and distinctive merchandise will make you feel like you're rummaging through the attic of an eccentric and whimsical great aunt with oddball but flawless taste.

GIFTS FOR GIRLS

The Flat of the Hill

60 Charles St., Boston, 617-619-9977

If there's a girly-girl on your gift list, grab your credit cards and get yourself to this adorable Beacon Hill shop. Owner Katherine Morse stocks it with delightful and distinctive jewelry, unique bath and body products and all manner of froufrou frippery. There are cute handbags for any occasion, a selection of sassy and sweet gift books, and stationery so beautiful that you'll gladly sacrifice the convenience of e-mailing. The store also carries small-scale home decor items, belts and accessories—in fact, among the most popular items are locally made flower pins, used by some of Boston's best-dressed women to accent clothing, hairdos and purses. Even if your pur strings are tight, you're bound to find something you lik Prices range from $1.50 to $450. A word to the wis though: Since winning Best Gift Boutique from us la year, the owners say they've gotten 10 times busier, so during the week instead of on Saturday or Sunday.

WINE SHOP

Brix Wine Shop

1284 Washington St., Boston, 617-542-2749, www.brixwineshop.com

When was the last time someone rushed to open the door for you as you entered a wine shop and then invited you to p take of some pinot noir from crystal stemware, as opposed to a plastic cup? If your answer is "never," then you haven't be to this service-oriented South End wine emporium. Staffers offer expert but unpretentious wine advice and tailor an eclec inventory to patrons'—as opposed to their own—tastes, with the understanding that for every person who loves Cha pagne there's someone who prefers prosecco. Owners Carri Wroblewski and Klaudia Mally are best friends whose relatio ship was born from the fruit of the vine: They met when Wroblewski was working at a local wine store and Mally was h customer. Since opening in December, their stylish shop, which hosts weekly tastings at its 10-foot granite tasting table a has a natural cork floor, has impressed demanding oenophiles with its varied array of unusual and hard-to-find wines. On lect Mondays, the owners host bartenders and chefs, who pair their mixological and culinary creations with selections fr the store's impressive cellars. Finally, a shop that elevates the act of selecting a wine into as much of an art form as making

MOVING COMPANY

Gentle Giant Moving Co.

29 Harding St., Somerville, 617-661-3333, www.gentlegiant.com

The winner in this category for six years and counting, Gentle Giant is aces in terms of efficiency, muscle and taking care with customers' belongings. The employees tend to be current or former college athletes (owner Larry O'Toole is a master rower and trains his staffers by having them run the steps at Harvard Stadium), and their physical prowess means they can haul a grand piano up several flights of stairs or delicately maneuver a Duncan Phyfe chiffonier into a tricky corner. They know it all when it comes to packing and transporting securely, and their prices are reasonable. Few things are as potentially stressful as moving. Using Gentle Giant to do the job is like taking a valium.

130 Needham St., Newton, 617-965-5054;
other locations; www.newburycomics.com

Temper some of your embarrassment at buying the latest American Idol winner's CD by getting it at this indie music-and-more store, which sells mainstream and underground releases side by side, and at the same low prices. The chain's flagship store on Newbury Street hosts frequent meet-and-greets and performances by recording artists, and all of its stores boast a virtually unbeatable selection of used and new CDs and movies. It also sells top-notch novelties, a revolving inventory of quirky and profane curiosities that include unconventional board games (Gayopoly), conversation-provoking decor (strings of Simpsons lights) and the full spectrum of Manic Panic hair dyes. Best of all, everything's inexpensive enough that, if you really wanted to, you could buy all of the above and still have some cash left over for that Goonies lunchbox you're ironically (OK, not so ironically) eyeing.

QUIRKY GIFTS

Black Ink

101 Charles St., Boston, 617-723-3883;
5 Brattle St., Cambridge, 617-497-1221

Offbeat shops with playful and quirky merchandise are a dime a dozen. What sets Black Ink apart is that owner Susan Corcoran is constantly introducing new products you don't see everywhere else—even repeat customers will find something new and irresistible on each visit. The antidote to mass-market monotony, it's a store packed with the kind of stuff you'd be thrilled to find in your Christmas stocking, from the whimsically functional (stationery, refrigerator magnets, drink coasters) to the out-and-out kooky (retro toys, rubber stamps, Totoro plush characters and faux cupcakes and doughnuts). The one constant is the quality of design, as even the kitschiest item is a shining example of its kind. You'd have to be a sourpuss not to smile as you peruse the sushi-shaped wind-up toys or a peanut-shaped eraser. Expect the unexpected.

SHOE REPAIR

Santacross Distinctive Shoe Service

151 Tremont St., Boston, 617-426-6978

You don't need a Harvard Business School diploma to know that good work leads to good word-of-mouth, which means a thriving small business. For Santacross owner John Anglin, who learned his trade from actual shoemakers, advertising is unnecessary. His workmanship speaks for itself, and pretty much every first-time customer becomes a loyal one. Though most of his customers are everyday civilians seeking to maintain their favorite shoes, he's the footwear-fixer of choice for Broadway shows on tour in Boston, and you can just imagine the wear and tear a chorus boy's loafers get. He

FURNITURE, MODERATELY PRICED

Boston Interiors

31 Boylston St., Brookline, 617-731-6038; other locations;
www.bostoninteriors.com

Every first-time condo owner or apartment renter knows that quickly and tastefully furnishing a home can be a financially crippling, logistical nightmare. This chain relieves some of the sting with affordable pricing and design associates who will work with you at no extra cost to put together an aesthetically pleasing new room. (They will also deliver your new furniture almost anywhere in eastern Massachusetts for a reasonable 5 percent fee, and anywhere else nationwide for a pinch more.) If you want to stick to a budget without compromising on style, there's no better place to outfit your living, dining and bedrooms—Boston Interiors boasts a gigantic inventory of everything from sofas and side tables to desks and credenzas in styles ranging from country to classic to contemporary. Proof that blowing a bundle on an interior designer and decor from pricey showrooms isn't the only way to make your place look like it belongs in the pages of Metropolitan Home.

does 80 percent of the shop's work himself and treats each pair of shoes as if it were his own. They say you can't judge a man until you've walked a mile in his moccasins. Well, you can judge Anglin after walking in moccasins he's fixed.

1815 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-661-1666;
37 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill, 617-566-0220;
www.citysports.com

This chain's six area locations stock apparel and accessories for practically every sport under the sun. From softball and field hockey to snowboarding or water polo, not only have they got the gear, but there's a good chance that someone who works there knows the game firsthand. The uniformly athletic and helpful sales staff gladly shares its knowledge and enthusiasm. In addition to equipment from brands like Puma, Adidas, Nike and Asics, City Sports carries ancillary gear like sunglasses, bandannas and water bottles. Even if your preferred sport is tailgating, they've got the essentials: hibachis and official Boston team gear. And because it's a large chain, their prices are competitive and there's bound to be a location convenient to where you live or work. Fanatics and weekend warriors alike swear by City Sports, and so do we.

SUPERMARKET

Whole Foods

15 Westland Ave., Boston, 617-375-1010;
15 Washington St., Brighton, 617-738-8187;
115 Prospect St., Cambridge, 617-492-0070;

340 River St., Cambridge, 617-876-6990;
916 Walnut St., Newton, 617-969-1141;
other locations; www.wholefoodsmarket.com

This all-natural, environmentally and socially conscious grocery chain makes food shopping feel like a luxury rather than a chore. Its own line of food, household goods and body products (none of which contain anything genetically modified) raises the concept of generic to unprecedented heights, and Whole Foods also stocks most well-known national brands, with the exception of those whose ingredient list reads more like a chemistry experiment than something you'd eat. Each store has a bakery that makes pastries and European-style breads, as well as a flower department with the dewiest seasonal blooms you'll see outside of a florist's shop. The butcher stations are a carnivore's dream, while the seafood section features the freshest daily catch (Whole Foods even operates its own seafood facility, Pigeon Cove, in Gloucester). Best of all is the fact that all of your purchases contribute to a variety of good causes: Whole Foods donates 5 percent of its after-tax profits to not-for-profit organizations.

TAILOR

Rizzo

66 Church St., Cambridge, 617-547-5052

Everyone has a tailor they swear by, but few inspire the kind of breathless praise that you'll hear from patrons of this Harvard Square institution. Owner Joe Calautti apprenticed in his native Italy and for years has made custom suits, jackets and outerwear for a discerning clientele that includes some of the best-dressed faculty members and administrators at Harvard, as well as a certain presidential candidate (Senator John Kerry is one of Calautti's clients). Because he knows how to create garments from whole cloth, alterations are a snap, and his understanding of how clothing is constructed is shared by his wife Olga, who runs the business with him. It's not unusual to meet someone in Rizzo who has been a loyal customer for 20 years, and it's not unusual to see something Calautti made for that customer 20 years ago still looking as good as the day it was first worn.

WAY TO GET YOUR HOME INTO ELLE DECOR

Koo de Kir

65 Chestnut St., Boston, 617-723-8111, www.koodekir.com

Chock-full of arrestingly gorgeous furniture, lamps and decorative items with a distinctive urban aesthetic, this Beacon Hill treasure has a cool-yet-casual, blissed-out atmosphere that reflects the sensibility of owner Kristine Irving. The designer of such feel-good spaces as Peking Tom's and the Paramount restaurant, Irving has also had her handiwork featured in In Style and Lucky, among other publications. The store offers free design services (including help with color scheme, furniture layout, and fabric selection) with a minimum purchase, but a minimum purchase means maximum style. Just ask Trading Spaces designers Laurie Hickson-Smith and Doug Wilson, who shopped at Koo de Kir for the show's "100 Grand" special last summer. Irving also hosts trunk shows of hip artists through its Young Collectors series. It's the domestic equivalent of that up-and-coming clothing boutique where everything is cutting-edge but still affordable. ➳

BEAUTY BOUTIQUE

Beauty and Main

95 Union St., Newton, 617-243-0036;
66 South St., Hingham, 781-741-8501;
79 Central St., Wellesley, 781-237-1685;
www.beautyandmain.com

If you're like us, you can't resist the temptation to try new beauty products, which is why Beauty and Main has become a regular part of our shopping regimen. The epitome of customer service, each store is manned (or, more likely, wo-manned) by professionally trained makeup artists and skin care professionals who are prepared to answer questions and offer the inside dope. The inventory, meanwhile, is meticulously chosen, ranging from the standards to products that are normally available only through professional channels or forays to foreign cities. Browsing is encouraged; testing is expected. Shopping at Beauty and Main is like sneaking into your big sister's bathroom to try out all her cool new stuff, except that here, they'll actually help you.

BEAUTY LEGEND

Mario Russo

9 Newbury St., Boston, 617-424-6676;
Mario Russo at Louis Boston,
234 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-266-4485;
www.mariorusso.com

He came. He cut. He conquered. The man who began as a mere hairstylist has grown into an international phenomenon, relied upon by beauties on both coasts and constantly quoted in fashion magazines. He's expanded beyond his original salon with an outpost at Louis Boston, and his products (ranging from shampoos and conditioners to nail polish) can be found in the rooms at the Nine Zero (where guests are treated to our man's body bars) and as far away as Henri Bendel in New York and high-end boutiques in Texas. On top of all those creative genes, he's a shrewd businessman and a brilliant marketer, and our hats go off to him (in hopes that he'll offer us a haircut).

BEST-KEPT SECRET

Leon de Magistris of Leon and Co.

84 Leonard St., Belmont, 617-484-4777,
www.leonandco.com

Far from the madding crowds of Newbury Street (and in Belmont Center, no less!), this princely Italian does portrait-worthy cuts. If your roots have you in a rut or your style is sadly reminiscent of the '70s, he can resurrect your lackluster locks with the skill of a surgeon and the charm of Casanova. Internationally acclaimed, he's worked with labels such as Escada, Ferragamo and Oscar de la Renta, tended to the tresses of models and celebrities and even has his own line of outstanding hair care products. His staff is a group of equally talented Newbury Street ex-pats, and his establishment has all the pizzazz of a downtown salon. Best of all, the suburban location means you won't have to run outside with your head wrapped in tinfoil to feed quarters into the parking meter. Worth a trip to Belmont even if you live in the city.

COSMETICS DEPARTMENT

Filene's

Downtown Crossing, 426 Washington St., Boston, 617-357-2100;
CambridgeSide Galleria, Cambridge, 617-621-3800;
75 Leonard St., Belmont, 617-484-3800;
The Mall at Chestnut Hill, 225 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill, 617-965-3800; www.filenes.com

A visit to a department store cosmetics counter can be like a scene from a nature show. You (the prey) quietly try to do your thing at the watering hole, while all manner of predators (the salespeople) try to sell you anything tubed or tubbed in the name of "you'll love it," and herds of other grazers push and jostle you. Not at Filene's, though. At its spacious, well-laid-out cosmetics departments, shoppers can peruse the wares at a languid pace. The lines offered at each store vary, but what you can't find at one (no Stila, Shiseido or Clarins at Belmont) you can find at another (Downtown Crossing has all of those in ample qualities). Unobtrusive reps for lines like Clinique, Chanel, Lancôme and Shiseido maintain a poised, "I'm here if you need me" demeanor. The selection is staggering, the lighting is flattering and the overall experience is pleasant, making it more likely that the lipstick color you leave with will be one you stick with for a long time.

CREATIVE STYLING

Patrick McGinley at Vidal Sassoon

14 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-5496,
www.vidalsassoon.com

Remember those old TV ads in which Vidal Sassoon breathlessly enthused about "a maaaahvelous cut"? The Boston salon that bears Sassoon's name is still true to his word, especially in the person of 17-year veteran Patrick McGinley, the salon's creative director. Like an encounter with Warren Beatty in Shampoo, each appointment with him is an exercise in seduction, except that rather than coaxing his clients into bed, he coaxes the most imaginative and flattering look from their hair. Frequent forays to London keep him ahead of the stylistic curve, and his knack for eliminating excess helps him straddle that fine line between an outstanding cut and an outrageous one.

DAY SPA

Giuliano

338 Newbury St., Boston, 617-262-2220, www.giulianodayspa.com

These days, it seems like every salon that offers anything more than haircuts slaps the word "spa" on the end of its name. Pretenders, take note: Giuliano is the genuine article. From tanning to mudwraps, facials to massage, it offers a smorgasbord of pampering treatments to soothe even the most tightly wound soul, with packages designed for bridal parties, couples or anyone who wants to feel fussed over like a human poodle. The able hands of 60 professionals help clients shed layer after layer of stress. You can choose a soft-pack treatment and be cocooned in warm towels on a pressure-free cushion pumped full of heated water while your tight muscles are kneaded into submission, or go for a Vichy treatment and feel the penetrating power of six shower heads washing away your cares while a masseur works his magic. Couples can rejuvenate together in the Rasul Room, a private Mediterranean-style suite (complete with a steam cham and a ceiling that replicates a starlit night sky) wh they are slathered with six different types of mud. may feel grumpy and frumpy walking in the door, you'll leave feeling blissed-out and beautiful.

ETHNIC HAIR CARE

Olive's Salon and Day Spa

When women of color want to look fabulous, th head west on Route 9 to visit the fairy godmothe ethnic hairstylists, Olive Lee Benson. When it co to cosseting the tightest curls or softening the co est coiffure, this salon is tops, and it's the best sou in Boston for hair relaxation and conditioning. most salons, getting your hair relaxed is anything a relaxing experience. Here, though, it verges on sublime. Olive's expertise is so well-known that salon offers in-store training on techniques and pr ucts (like those in Olive's recently launched li Universal Textures), as well as seminars on subje like texture analysis. The gurus at Olive's are also perb stylists, crafting gorgeous, elegant updos that sure to stop any show. Sisters tired of having th hair treated like a white chick's should hightail i Chestnut Hill and check out Olive's.

EYEBROW SHAPING

Renee Christopher for Maksou Salon and Sp

125 Broad St., Boston, 617-443-8633, www.maksou.co

If the eyes are the window to the soul, the brows the window treatment. And like the curtains i well-decorated room, they require occasional c and upkeep. Renee Christopher, who heads up spa at this renowned downtown salon, has attai the highest level of certification for makeup art and is a master at shaping and refining eyebrow that they flatter the face. Impervious to trends (n people look silly with pencil-thin brows), she ex at determining the correct arch for each individu facial structure. The rest of you doesn't look exa like everyone else. Why should your eyebrows?

HAIR COLORIST

Seth Selman at James Joseph Salon

30 Newbury St., Boston, 617-266-7222,
www.jamesjosephsalon.com

Last year we named him best colorist, and then Al magazine named him Boston's best new hairsty Looks like this kid is going to have to build himse trophy room. He's been asked to style hair for local shows like PAX's The Industry as well as national sh like TLC's A Makeover Story. He's also the mane r for countless fashion shows, including Oscar d Renta's Boston runway presentation and Cathe Malandrino's New York City Fashion Week show Bumble & Bumble–trained expert at giving his cli either a natural or a daring look, he can match y hair to your skin tone so perfectly that your mother wouldn't know it wasn't natural, or he can your mop a garish green without making it look you used Kool-Aid. Puckish and perfectly charm Selman's already at the top of his game.

BLONDE-MAKER

Jennifer Fontana at Salon Fontana

Sports Club L.A., 4 Avery St., Boston, 617-375-8510, www.salonfontana.com

here are those who believe that there's no such ing as too blonde, and others who opt for a more btle, someone-in-my-family-was-from-Norway ok. Whether you want to resemble Jean Harlow or ene Tierney, Jennifer Fontana (who runs the salon side the Sports Club L.A. with her husband, Scott, d brother-in-law Richard) has just the right touch. ffering everything from full color to a light gloss, she n rescue brunettes from the boredom of brown, nish brassy streaks from platinum tresses, douse rkening roots with a kiss of honeyed gold, or cor- ct the frosty fakes of a badly highlighted do. If ondes really do have more fun, a lot of them have r to thank for it.

LEG AND BIKINI WAX

Karen Golden at Salon Pepe Leyva

957 Comm. Ave, Boston, 617-254-7577, www.salonpepe.com

Besides root canal, cleaning the toilet, and paying taxes, we can think of few more odious activities than having unwanted hair ripped from your skin, but the medieval torture that is a leg and bikini wax is mitigated by the tenderness and expertise of Karen Golden at this clean, serene salon. Her years of experience and innate skill, combined with the bedside manner of Florence Nightingale, make the experience not just relatively painless but—dare we say it?—almost pleasant. Even better, her rates are competitive ($18–$25 for bikini; $60 and up for the full leg). If you're going to suffer for vanity, you might as well minimize the pain and expense.

MAKEUP ARTIST

Jenny Brown for Stila at Filene's

426 Washington St., Boston, 617-357-2100, www.filenes.com

Some people are naturals at their profession, and Jenny Brown is one of them. In fact, it's easy to imagine her as a little girl, playing with lipstick and blush and instinctively fixing up her face flawlessly. A graduate of Massachusetts College of Art, which explains her subtle and unerring feel for color, balance and composition, Brown has worked as a makeup artist at salons and for several product lines, and her handiwork has appeared in numerous photo shoots, music videos, TV shows and films. She brings all that expertise to bear with each of her clients, and any woman who wants a fresh new look will leave her chair looking natural yet radiant. Whether you want to tweak your existing regime or are looking for a whole new you, she knows how to do it gracefully and tastefully.

MANICURE

Donna Charloff for Beaucage Salon

71 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-7171, www.beaucage.com

There's a huge waiting list to see her, but while most women (and men) don't plan too far ahead for a manicure, it's worth the effort for the attention of this 10-plus year veteran with a long list of high-profile and demi-celebrity clients. A Caravaggio for your claws, she's a serious artist who never rushes a job. Her loyal following includes both men and women who praise her unfailingly sweet personality in addition to her skill. Her specialty is shaping natural nails, but she does the occasional silk nail wrap. Book well in advance, and prepare to feel like a hand model after you see her.

MASSAGE

The staff at Étant

524 Tremont St., Boston, 617-423-5040, www.etant.com

Everyone has a favorite Beatle or cast member from Sex in the City, but you can still recognize the brilliance of the whole ensemble, which is what this award is about. Each member of the staff at this South End day spa is utterly devoted to your well-being, and together they represent the full range of massage options. For sore, tight bodies there's deep tissue and sports massage, focusing on specific muscle groups. Clients wanting a total mind and body experience have the option of integrative massage (which heightens body awareness), massage for energy balance, Swedish aromatherapy, and stretching for body alignment. For extra attention, choose the four-handed massage and get two masseurs to work out your kinks. Reiki, acupuncture and reflexology are also available. A sanctuary for those in need of some laying on of hands.

MIRACLE WORKER

Dean Boudreau at Beaucage Salon

71 Newbury St., Boston, 617-437-7171, www.beaucage.com

Relationships can become predictable, and the new, flashy hair salon down the street is sometimes too tempting. Even those of us who would never be unfaithful to a lover have made the unforgivable mistake of cheating on our hair stylist, often with tragic results. For those times when the new cut or color is so atrocious you can't even bear to go slinking back to your stylist, there's one man to turn to: Beaucage owner Dean Boudreau. Operating on the optimistic principle that even the worst cut can become something beautiful, Dean's never seen a disaster he couldn't fix. With the soothing manner of a pediatrician and the tact of a diplomat, he'll have you looking fabulous again in no time. Just don't ask him to participate as you verbally dismember the stylist who inflicted the damage. He's too much of a class act to diss the competition.

ONE-STOP SPORTS CLUB

Boston Athletic Club

653 Summer St., Boston, 617-269-4300,
www.bostonathleticclub.com

If you've sworn to improve your physical shape, join the Boston Athletic Club and your promise stands a chance of becoming a reality. Originally founded in 1973 as a tennis club, today it offers basketball, racquetball, handball and squash as well as tennis. In addition, there's a pool and a cardio center equipped with exercise machines, weights, and areas with mats for stretching. Every day, group exercise classes are offered, from the classic to the cutting-edge. Like working up a sweat while getting limber? Try Baptiste power yoga. Looking for a way to spice up that same-old

MEN'S HAIRCUT

Michael Rossi for Avanti Salon

11 Newbury St., Boston, 617-267-4027, www.avantiboston.com

Clothes may make the man, but a bad haircut can undo even the best outfit. If you doubt this, just look at George Cloone now, as opposed to when he had a recurring role on The Facts of Life. A visit to one of Newbury Street's most gifted sty ists is just what the doctor ordered for any guy. Rather than fobbing off the newest haircut trend on every client, Ros knows what length and style will suit each individual's face and hair type. Whether you're trying to grow out an ill-advise buzz cut or contemplating chopping off your Samson-like locks, Rossi can ease the process with interim trims. His sk with the scissors is surpassed only by his winning personality, and between all the jokes and flattery, you'll leave feeling great as you look.

PEDICURE

My Nail Salon

261 West Newton St., Boston, 617-236-1440;
669 Tremont St., Boston, 617-424-6261

It's always a good idea to go to the nail salon that other manicurists use. Whether you dinged your polish during last night's Frisbee game or you need a killer new pink for that big wedding on Nantucket, we recommend these little shops, one of which is conveniently located behind the Prudential Center across Huntington Avenue (the perfect place to soothe your soles after a shopping marathon). They accept walk-ins, and the wait is never discouraging. The pedicurists are fast and efficient and their handiwork flawless and long-lasting. There's no need to shudder at the sight of your feet after sliding into a cute new pair of sandals or open-toed shoes. There's also no reason to pay an arm and a leg to have the job done right. My Nails Salon is the answer to both problems.

QUICKIE HIGHLIGHTS

Highlights Salon

286 Newbury St., Boston, 617-247-8200,
www.highlightssalon.com

Summer in New England whizzes by way too fast, and with all those weekends on the Vineyard and rooftop barbeques, it's easy to put hair appointments aside and let the sun do the work. Bad idea. After a few weeks of this negligent hair care, you'll notice things looking a bit tatty. If you're desperate for a bit of color but can't get an appointment with your stylist or don't trust a coloring kit from the pharmacy, your best bet is this salon, which accepts walk-ins for touch-ups and partial and full foils. Any of the colorists will see you on short notice, and all of them are reliable. Being proud of your roots is one thing. Making everyone else look at them is another.

SALON CHAIN

Lord's and Lady's Salons

One Lord's and Lady's Way, Boston, 877-323-4700;
CambridgeSide Galleria, Cambridge, 617-577-0022;
other locations; www.lordsandladys.com

In the salon world, cloning can be the kiss of death; most attempts to franchise a good thing lead to cookie-cutter outposts wreaking havoc on the exacting standards and high quality of the original. Lord's and Lady's is the rare exception. Operating like a well-oiled machine, the chain demands that all branches meet its sky-high expectations. Another perk is price control, due to economies of scale. With locations throughout eastern Massachusetts, there's one nearby no matter where you experience your hair emergency, but the flagship shop right here in Boston is the equal of any snooty Newbury Street salon.

FACIAL

Daniela Browning at G Spa

35 Newbury St., Boston, 617-267-4772, www.grettastyle.com

Browning is a skilled aesthetician who serves as director of this swanky and supremely soothing day spa. All of G Spa's services are exceptional, but we've singled out Browning's facial because we've yet to find her equal in Boston. Her secret is a delicate balance of thorough cleaning, exfoliation and appropriate moisturizing, which she expertly gauges by analyzing each client's skin. Unlike many of her peers, she's not pushing a product line, although some of her favorites include Peter Thomas Roth's Oxygen Mist, Sonya Dakar's Cellular Path Crème, and June Jacobs' Papaya Enzyme. But perhaps our favorite thing about her is that her clients don't leave looking like raw hamburger meat. She's so skilled, they look fresh and visibly improved, without all the puffiness and irritation.

STYLIST TO MAKE YOU LOOK LIKE A SUPERMODEL

Mitch Derosa at Mitchell John Salon

67 Broad St., Boston, 617-951-0122, www.mjsalon.com

Plenty of people know that Mitch Derosa is one of Boston's most skilled and experienced stylists. What they probably don't know is that he's traveled to work at New York fashion shows, that he did the hair for 15 runway presentations this past season (including Betsey Johnson and Heatherette), or that he's done hair for magazines like Bazaar, Italian Vogue and German Elle. But what might surprise them the most is that someone this talented and plugged in to the fashion industry could also be modest. Well, now we've let the cat out of the bag. Whether you have a special event where it's imperative that you resemble Amber or Giselle, or you're simply in the mood to look super-glamorous, make an appointment to see him. He'll give you that cutting-edge style that will have your friends wondering who the new man in your life is, and asking whether you've lost weight or that outfit is new.

TEETH WHITENING

Brite Smile

75 Newbury St., Boston, 617-867-9500,
www.britesmile.com

Anyone who's tried those over-the counter tooth whitening gels or strip knows how idiotic they make you fee and no one wants to give up coffee for brilliant smile. The best solution is th clean and clinical Newbury Street tooth whitening salon. For $600, after 90 min utes of awkwardness you'll be flashing grin to rival any game-show host, excep that yours won't look like a mouthful Chiclets. Your teeth will look dazzling ye natural, and you'll have reason to smile even on the most exasperating days.

WELLNESS WITH STYLE

The Sports Club/LA

4 Avery St., Boston, 617-375-8200, www.thesportsclubla.com

While most gyms resemble nothing s much as coal mines—dark, dank, smell and full of straining, red-faced peopl making unflattering faces—the Sport Club/LA is a marble, glass and meta monument to looking good and feelin good. The facilities are top-flight—from Junior Olympic–size swimming pool, bas ketball and squash courts, Pilates, Re (Sports Club/LA's version of spinning and boxing studios to outstanding grou exercise programs and an exercise floo that combines all the latest and be equipment for both weight training an cardio. Then there are the amenities— plush locker rooms staffed by friendly an helpful concierges, validated parking, dry-cleaner—not to mention the anci lary perks. Salon Fontana and Splash, day spa, offer the full gamut of pamperin and beauty treatments, while Blu, the su perb restaurant perched 100 feet abov street level with a panoramic view Downtown Crossing, is worth a trip by i self. Everyone who joins agrees on thre things: This place becomes a major drain on their tim but they look better and love every minute of it.

WOMEN'S HAIRCUT

Charles Maksou at Maksou Salon and Day Spa

125 Broad St., Boston, 617-443-8633,
www.maksou.com

We wonder when this guy sleeps. The owner of one of th city's busiest salons, Maksou recently launched his ow eponymous product line, and he's continuously involve in runway shows and photo shoots. Amazingly, he sti finds time to keep his clients looking fantastic with th dry-cut technique he learned from legendary New Yo stylist John Sahag. Once you go dry, you'll never go bac Individual hair strands are trimmed, instead of large w clumps, so you'll see your haircut taking shape befo your eyes, rather than waiting anxiously for the blow-d to be finished. The result is a cut that works with yo hair's natural shape and movement and requires very li tle styling. It blends, with no crazy angles or rigid layer and grows out flawlessly. Many stylists try to emulate th dry cut, but in Boston, there's only one master. And tha Charles Maksou. ⊶

AFFORDABLE HANDBAGS

Banana Republic

Multiple Boston locations, www.bananarepublic.com

A purveyor of fad safari T-shirts in the '80s, Banana Republic has grown into a well-respected high-end fashion outlet, combining quality clothes with moderate pricing. Its contemporary take on the classics is on the safe edge of fashion but unmistakably stylish, making Banana Republic a good place to fill in those gaps in your wardrobe. And handbags are one of its special strengths. While fashion victims put themselves on waiting lists for the latest by some Japanese cartoonist, or shell out mad moolah for a replica of Princess Grace's favorite purse, at Banana Republic the savvy woman can find a flirty, flowered shoulder bag to accent that cute little sundress, or a clutch to go with her couture evening gown. The store carries handbags in every size and shape, from satchels fit for toting files to the office to clutches just big enough for a cell phone and lipstick. It's comforting to know you don't always have to invest a month's rent for the perfect purse to complement an already gorgeous outfit.

DEPARTMENT STORE

Neiman Marcus

Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-536-3660, www.neimanmarcus.com

A synonym for luxury retailing, Neiman Marcus is a monument to Texas-style consumerism, which states that it's not worth owning unless it's the very best. Obviously, the goods are top-notch—from the makeup counter to the men's department to the fur salon—but the act of shopping here is equally sumptuous, with its marble floors, spacious dressing rooms and staff that's as helpful and unobtrusive as a trusted butler. Mothers can head to the St. John suits while daughters try on Juicy jeans and dads have their Brioni suits tailored. Seasonal sales put Neiman's wares within reach for every income bracket, and a separate entrance from Copley Place's tempting distractions makes one-stop shopping speedy and efficient. From a housewarming gift for your most discerning friend to a compact umbrella for that weekend trip to London, Neiman Marcus has everything you need to live high on the hog.

HIDDEN GEM

Christina DeFalco

383 Hanover St., Boston, 617-523-8870, www.christinadefalco.com

Nestled among the doors of the busy cafés on Hanover Street is the nondescript entrance to Christina DeFalco's North End boutique. Hardwood floors and exposed brick walls provide the setting for whimsical, unusual designs. Baby T-shirts emblazoned with retro divas like Jackie O and Marilyn Monroe are spiced with tiny Swarovski crystal detailing. This season's trendy tiered skirt is amped up with embroidery and shocking hues of pink and green, while pearlized leather slickers put the boring beige trench coat to shame. Unusual artisanal jewelry that DeFalco scouts from Italian designers like Angela Caputi shares space with original items by Tarina Tarantino. And all of it would look fabulous with one of DeFalco's ruched slip dresses. Any woman interested in not looking like a clone owes it to herself to visit. Just don't say we didn't warn you when you find yourself spending your whole paycheck and then celebrating with a cannoli next door.

HIGH-END CLOTHING

Louis Boston

234 Berkeley St., Boston, 617-262-6100, www.louisboston.com

The ne plus ultra of Boston's luxury department stores, Louis doesn't merely sell stuff; it dispenses taste. The store's high-fashion but no-B.S. sensibility combines an eye for the new with a knowledge of the old, making it Boston's answer to such legendary retailers as London's Harvey Nichols and L.A.'s Fred Segal. Men's fashion (also found on the second floor) shares the third floor with Salon Mario Russo, a satellite salon of Newbury Street's hairstylist-to-the-stars (Duchess of York Sarah Ferguson and James Taylor are clients). The first floor features home goods including art, antiques and assorted knick-knackery and houses the restaurant L, which has become one of the hottest spots in the northeast since it reopened last fall under chef Pino Maffeo. Off-the-charts hipness in a Beaux Arts building that originally housed the New England Museum of Natural History, it's a slice of pure fabulous.

INTIMATE APPAREL

La Perla

250 Boylston St., Boston, 617-423-5709, www.laperla.com

There are several reasons a woman would spend north of $300 for a single item of underwear: 1. She's trying to seduce someone. 2. It's her wedding night. 3. She's addicted to the fine Italian undergarments this lingerie boutique sells. Since 1954, La Perla has spun diaphanous fantasies out of the highest-quality lace, silks and tulles. Unlike its crasser cousins (think Frederick's of Hollywood), the designs manage to be both perfectly ladylike and sizzlingly sexy. Exquisite details from La Perla, like 3-D embroidery and lace inlays, are handcrafted and qualify as wearable works of art. Yes, it's expensive, but it also brings new meaning to the phrase, "Let me slip into something more comfortable."

MEN'S DRESS SHIRTS

Thomas Pink

Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-267-0447; 280 Washington St., Boston, 617-426-7859; www.thomaspink.com

A shirt by Thomas Pink is like a well-constructed bridge or a vintage Bordeaux: Math, science, precision and time all contribute to the final result. Sumptuous cottons in eye-popping hues fill the shelves of the bright and welcoming store, recalling the scene in The Great Gatsby when Jay creates a blizzard of multicolored shirts to impress Daisy. Shoppers don't need a Gatsby-size bank account, though. The goods are reasonably priced, and with designs appropriate for all body types and suitable for a professional, casual or slimmer look, a guy ca revitalize his entire wardrobe in one visit.

MEN'S MODERATELY PRICED CLOTHING

Sean

154 Newbury St., Boston, 617-399-3993, www.seanstore.com

Not to be confused with the similarly named '70 teen idol and Tiger Beat cover boy, Sean Cassidy re cently opened an outlet of his eponymous boutiqu on Boston's boulevard of style, following success i New York and California. The goods can best be de scribed as European fabrics fashioned with a classi French sensibility, meaning they'll withstand th fickle winds of passing trends. Better yet, the price are in the reasonable range, offering style-conscious Bostonians an excellent compromise between set tling for cookie-cutter fashions and blowing a bundl on a smart new wardrobe.

OUTLET SHOPPING

Wrentham Village Premium Outlets

1 Premium Outlets Blvd., Wrentham, 508-384-0600, www.premiumoutlets.com/wrentham

You love the bargains to be had at outlets, but yo hate the outlet-shopping experience: hordes of boor ish suburbanites wearing fanny-packs and grazing lik sheep along the aisles of messy, understaffed and dis organized stores. The answer is to drag your butt t the tiny hamlet of Wrentham. Adidas, Barney' BCBG, Brooks Brothers, Burberry, Calvin Klein, Et enne Aigner, IZOD, J. Crew, Kenneth Cole, Levi' Off 5th Saks Fifth Avenue Outlet, Puma, Theor Versace, Lacoste, Williams-Sonoma...whew! The li goes on and on. Shops stay open until 9 pm Monda through Saturday, so you'll have plenty of time to g there and give your credit cards a workout. A recer addition is a Journeys store selling funky footwea and a Coach store is due to open at the end of Jul The money you save will be well worth the cost of g and a 45-minute drive.

PLACE TO SPEND YOUR FORTUNE

Tiffany & Co.

Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-353-022 Atrium Mall, 300 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill, 617-527-188 www.tiffany.com

Before the white satin ribbon is untied, any recipien of the signature Tiffany blue box knows that what inside is thoughtfully designed, beautifully crafte and made from the finest materials. Whether it's sterling silver picture frame, a ruby-and-diamon necklace or a guest book for the beach house in Nan tucket, everything from Tiffany's whispers good tast In fact, one woman we know claims she got marrie only so she could register at Tiffany's for china ar crystal stemwear. Generations of upper-crust babi have been welcomed with a monogrammed ratt from Tiffany's, while many a marital rough spot h been smoothed over with a pair of Tiffany's cuff lin or platinum and diamond earrings. Not that one ne spend a fortune—like any good luxury retailer, it se affordable little whatnots, which, when packaged that unmistakable robin's-egg blue, somehow acqui an air of rarity.

INDULGENCE

Wolford

Copley Place, 100 Huntington Ave., Boston, 617-875-4550; the Mall at Chestnut Hill, 99 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill, 617-527-0638; www.wolford.com

Known for pricey (but worth it) stockings in every color and texture, this upscale boutique carries a carefully edited collection of items—from halter tops to leggings—that rely on materials like Lycra and spandex for their killer fit. Body-conscious tops in geometric prints and sexy styles are versatile enough for a day in the boardroom or an evening in the ballroom. The slimming silhouettes will add a dash of sex appeal to any woman's wardrobe, and men will be pleasantly surprised to find socks fit for a king. Yes, it's expensive. But aren't you worth it?

SHOES

Saks Fifth Avenue

The Shops at Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., Boston, 617-262-8500, www.saksfifthavenue.com

Amid life's dramas, nothing can soothe the savage soul (or soles) like a new pair of shoes, and no place does it with quite the style of the shoe salon at Saks Fifth Avenue. After Carrie Bradshaw waxed philosophical about their mystical ability to make magic on Sex and the City, "Manolos" became every woman's addiction, and Saks is one of the few places in town to supply the fix. Every well-dressed man needs a classic pair of Gucci loafers to go with a cashmere crewneck or shorts and a Polo shirt. From Burberry plaid espadrilles to Ferragamo flats, Jimmy Choo stiletto pumps to Bruno Magli slip-on drivers, Saks carries the very best. And while many of the brands are stratospherically expensive, Saks also stocks less-costly designers like Cole Haan and Anne Klein. For anyone with a shoe fetish, this place is pure porn.

THRIFT STORE

Absolutely Fabulous

1309 Cambridge St., Cambridge, 617-864-0656, www.fabulousinc.com

The temptation with a good thrift store is to keep it a secret, so that all those great finds don't get found out by others. Not to worry with Absolutely Fabulous. Owner Mara Kustra Loeber is a genius at offering a consistently excellent collection of the unique and funky. Racks of vintage clothing, kitschy home furnishings, fun jewelry and quirky handbags, not to mention handcrafts by local artists, cram the store. An array of lighters, ashtrays and cigarette holders recalls the time when smoking wasn't such a frowned-upon habit. The place to go when you need something off the beaten fashion path or a one-of-a-kind gift. But let's keep it between us, shall we?

TRENDY AFFORDABLE

H&M

350 Washington St., Boston, 617-482-7001, www.hm.com

Since the Swedish retailer opened a branch here two years ago, style-savvy Bostonians have been unable to imagine life without H&M, which offers a healthy dose of retail therapy without serious side effects for the bank account. With stores in 20 countries (and a new store opening in Cambridge this fall), it's also become the default stop among globe-trotters who have left some crucial wardrobe item at home and don't want to drop a bundle on a temporary replacement. Each season brings a new and extensive collection of clothing that successfully knocks off the latest trends from pricier designer labels. A godsend for expectant mothers and growing children who want to stay fashionable but won't be staying the same size for long, it's an excellent place to outfit an entire family with up-to-the-minute fashions you won't feel guilty giving to Goodwill after a single season.

WATCH SELECTION

Alpha Omega Jewelers

1380 Mass. Ave., Cambridge, 617-864-1227; The Shops at Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., Boston, 617-424-9030; additional suburban locations; www.alphaomegajewelers.com

The flagship Harvard Square Alpha Omega store is worth a day's excursion, so staggering is the array of timepieces. Since 1978, the family-owned business has dealt in fine jewelry and watches, and today the flagship store's 6,000-plus square feet of showrooms verges on sensory overload. While the selection is dizzying, the helpful, knowledgeable sales staff is there to guide customers, offering a crash course in everything from the watch's inner workings to the wristband. Alpha Omega's hope is that your purchase will last a lifetime, although once you've shopped there, you'll be drawn back again and again. Whether you're in the market for a Rolex or a Swatch, they have exactly what you need.

FINE JEWELRY

Shreve, Crump & Low

330 Boylston St., Boston, 617-267-9100, www.shrevecrumpandlow.com

Established in 1796, Shreve, Crump & Low is an integral part of the city's landscape and an icon synonymous with rarit quality and taste. Long before "bling" became a part of our vocabulary, Shreve's was adorning the hands, wrists, nec and ears of the city's elite. After more than two centuries, the only thing that hasn't changed is the jeweler's high sta dards. Constantly updating its image to avoid being perceived as passé, the company recently completed a major inte nal overhaul of the flagship store on the corner of Boylston and Arlington, and it continually introduces hot new desig ers like Baccarat and Laura Gibson. Whether you're purchasing a ruby cocktail ring to fit in with the country club set a daring mesh necklace to decorate your décolletage, the fact that it's from Shreve's is all the proof you need that i the very finest.

WOMEN'S EUROPEAN STYLES

Gipore

176 Newbury St., Boston, 617-424-1500, www.gipore.com

Italian clothing, with its slim cuts and beautiful fabrics, is ever more popular in this country. That explains the inspiration behind Gipore. Iranian-born ov Homeira Carroll envisioned an ultra-chic boutique like anything Boston has ever seen, specializing in Italian designers who are well known in Milan throughout Europe but elicit a "Who?" in these p No matter. The clothing is beyond fabulous and wa the beaten fashion path, and Carroll's desire to cat customers (whom she invariably calls "baby" or " ling") means she'll even overhaul an item fre charge—removing or relocating pockets, altering houette—until it's exactly right for the wearer.

WOMEN'S MODERATELY PRICED CLOTHING

DKNY

37 Newbury St., Boston, 617-236-0476, www.dkny.com

Few designers tread that delicate line between au courant and slavishly trendy with the panache and affordability of Donna Karan, and the DKNY boutique on the east end of Newbury Street is a must for the fashion-savvy but budget-constrained. The first two floors are devoted to women's clothing—from jackets to miniskirts and everything in between, including handbags and shoes. The evolving selection sometimes means items sometimes go on the sale racks in the back while they're still in season, so the careful shopper can assemble an entire season's wardrobe without breaking the bank.

WOMEN'S PLUS-SIZE CLOTHING

Marina Rinaldi

296 Boylston St., Boston, 617-423-1221

Maybe your dryer really did shrink that load of clothes again, or maybe your figure has become a bit more, shall we say, robust. In the latter case, Marina Rinaldi has a vast selection of stylish clothing in flattering cuts and gorgeous fabrics. Proof that being somewhat Rubenesque doesn't mean you have to wear a muumuu, Marina Rinaldi specializes in comme il faut fashions and can outfit women from head-to-toe: The store also carries a limited selection of shoes for larger feet and accessories to complement a more substantial frame. Among full-figured fashion plates the world over, Marina Rinaldi has come to mean "queen-size chic."

WOMEN'S PREPPY ATTIRE

In the Pink

133 Newbury St., Boston, 617-536-6423

Pink and green. Balmy blue. Sunshine yellow. The colors and prints in this Newbury Street boutique whisk you to a Hobe Sound sunset or a clambake on the coast of Maine the moment you're lured through the d Filled from floor to ceiling with flirty sundresses flowered sandals that you'll drool over, the shop cializes in the smart but sassy look epitomized by l Pulitzer (of whom In the Pink is a signature store). broidered capris are perfect for tailgating with M Buffy and Biff, while terrycloth shorts and tops to c a wet bathing suit will outfit you for lazy days by country club pool. Accessories are a key componer the Waspy look, and In the Pink has a complete in tory of shoes, belts and jewelry to accompany the colors and busy fabrics. A bright grosgrain belt straw tote for sunglasses and sunscreen makes the fect hostess gift for the friend whose beach house y visiting. Linens and an extensive children's line preppies-in-training complete the picture. In shor the Pink is straight from the top drawer. ⊷

MEN'S SUITS

Ermenegildo Zegna

[illegible]

Most men would prefer to see a woman wearing nothing. Most women, on the other hand, would like nothing better than to see their man in a well-made suit. (OK, so they might rather see Brad Pitt in a well-made suit, but you get the point.) Since 1910, this Italian company has been creating the finest fabrics for men's clothing, and it's now run by the third generation of the Zegna family. The label carefully treads the fine line between fashion and classic tailoring and takes great care with the quality of its fabrics—the company monitors the pastures and livestock that supply their raw materials and has even devised a contest for all major wool-producing countries to provide the finest fleece. Zegna's newest collection, Z Zegna, is geared toward a younger customer with a more modest bank account, but the superb craftsmanship remains. While fashion victims and trend followers chase the latest silhouette, the truly well-dressed man shops at Zegna. (For the record, the correct pronunciation is "Er-men-a-JILL-doe Zenya.")

FASHION COMEBACK

Lacoste

The Shops at Prudential Center, 800 Boylston St., Boston

617-437-1081, www.lacoste-usa.com

In seventh grade, that little crocodile on your chest wa the only status symbol to sport, but by 10th grade it was sure sign of geekdom. After a dismal decline in popularit in the early '90s, Lacoste has emphatically regained fas ion credibility among the setters and followers of trend A preppy staple, the trademark shirt was popularized b tennis star René Lacoste, known as Le Croc, in th 1930s, and for decades it was a de rigueur part of ar gentleman's wardrobe. Today, the company is redefinir its look with a nod to a younger, urban audience. New stretch fabric in lollipop colors updates the classic Pol and you can leave the collar and buttons behind with ta tops and other casual sportswear, men's and women watches, outerwear and fragrance. The sleek new bou tique, which opened in March, means Bostonians can g crocodile hunting in the safety of the Prudential Cente and the newfound chic of this long-dormant brand mea you can proudly sport that faded old alligator shirt ys haven't worn since prep school.

BRIDAL

BRIDAL FLORIST

Winston Flowers

569 Boylston St., Boston (and other locations),
617-541-1100, www.winstonflowers.com

If Winston Flowers shops were a movie star, they'd be Audrey Hepburn—exquisitely beautiful and flawlessly chic, even as she peddled daisies in My Fair Lady. Since 1944, Winston has excelled at combining classic design with the latest trends in floral arrangements. At any of its shops, cut flowers and decorative plants spill out onto the sidewalk, beckoning visitors into rustically elegant interiors that look like the sylvan setting for a fairy tale. A bride can browse the shops to gather ideas and then meet with one of Winston's master designers, who is guaranteed to infuse her wedding with a dose of magic. Yes, they're expensive. They're also worth it.

BRIDAL GOWNS

The Altered Bride

376 Boylston St., 2nd Floor, Boston, 617-859-8289, www.alteredbride.com

The hunt for the dress you've always dreamed of is a once-in-a-lifetime proposition, and possibly even a matter of life and death. Thankfully, the quest is painless at the Altered Bride, which offers a unique line of exclusive styles to suit every taste. Its custom-design service lets you turn your fantasy into reality, whether you want beads or pearls, poofy or straight, a long train or fishtail. Accessories are given equal billing, and the wide range of tiaras, veils, hats, headpieces, gloves, shoes and purses is all-encompassing. Having relocated from Newbury Street to larger digs on Boylston, the shop offers more space for you and your bridal party and carries dresses for the mother of the bride, so the second most important woman won't feel left out. Appointments are preferable, and the store is open until 8 pm on Tuesdays and Thursdays for women who want to avoid the Saturday crowds. Refreshingly honest and eager to please, owner Roseanna Martino and her assistants are like Cinderella's magical mice, fussing until the reflection in the mirror is the you-on-your-wedding-day that you always pictured. Reasonable prices and an in-house seamstress are the icing on the cake.

BRIDESMAIDS' GOWNS

Aria Bridesmaids

45 Newbury St., Suite 224, Boston, 617-425-0555,
www.ariadress.com

Terror, humiliation and discomfort are the three emotions most women feel when confronted with the prospect of selecting a bridesmaid's dress. Even when the array of styles is dizzying, they all seem to be a size 8, and if you're not a Stepford bride with Barbie bridesmaids, finding one dress to fit several distinctly shaped women presents a challenge…unless you shop at Aria. Here, where savvy brides and their attendants shop by appointment, the staff takes into account all the relevant factors—the women's figures and their budgets, not to mention the bride's vision. All dresses are custom-made, and the floor samples are available in a wide range of sizes. If Aria dresses your bridesmaids, you can rest assured there'll be no backstage bitching and moaning on the blessed day.

WEDDING CAKES

The Icing on the Cake

230 Adams St., Newton, 617-969-1830, www.theicingonthecake.com

The months-long process of planning a wedding can be tedious, with all the niggling little details to iron out. Arguments over the guest list and where to go on the honeymoon are enough to send some couples to a drive-through chapel in Vegas. But at least one major decision—namely, dessert—is an easy one, thanks to the bakers at the Icing on the Cake. Compared with the time and effort these folks lavish on each of their specialized cakes, planning the wedding itself will seem like…well, a piece of cake. In one year, the Icing hand-cracks approximately 42,000 eggs and hand-shapes roughly 31,000 frosting roses. They do traditional flawlessly but stay up-to-date on current trends, and the time they take to meet with each couple results in exactly the ideal cake. An added incentive: Icing offers gift certificates for first-anniversary cakes.

You'll be looking at the pictures for the rest of your life, so make sure you're not sporting a look that belongs on I Love the '80s. For such a singular occasion, in-the-know women leave their hair in the capable hands of Janet Warner. With more than 20 years' experience at the city's top salons, and training from Wella International and Sebastian, she's a genius at creating a sophisticated look that will highlight your natural beauty, so your wedding guests will remember you and not your hair. A consultation and trial appointment lessen the likelihood of being a damsel in distress on your wedding day, and while the spacious salon is conveniently located on Newbury Street, Warner will do location work for bridal parties of any size (for an additional fee). Be forewarned, though: She's one of Boston's Most Wanted, so schedule her services well in advance.

The setting for one of the most memorable momer of your life should match the importance of the oc sion, and the played-out, overpriced French pla won't win you points for creativity. Instead, wh your intended to Charlestown's charming cobbl streets and an exotic evening at this Morocc restaurant. Glimmering jewels dangling from sh drapes separate the two dining rooms and the n hookah lounge, while tiny votives cast an intima glow over rich silks and private tents in the deep c ors of North Africa. The exotic, heady aromas wa ing from the kitchen add another dimension of sen
ality, and the delicious aphrodisiac of authen
Moroccan cuisine will ensure that the spice wo end when the meal is over. Chef Samad Naam

THE FRUIT AND MEAT OF THEIR LITERARY LABORS

The Book Club Cookbook,* by Judy Gelman and Vicky Levy Krupp, includes more than 50 recipes and reviews inspired by books.

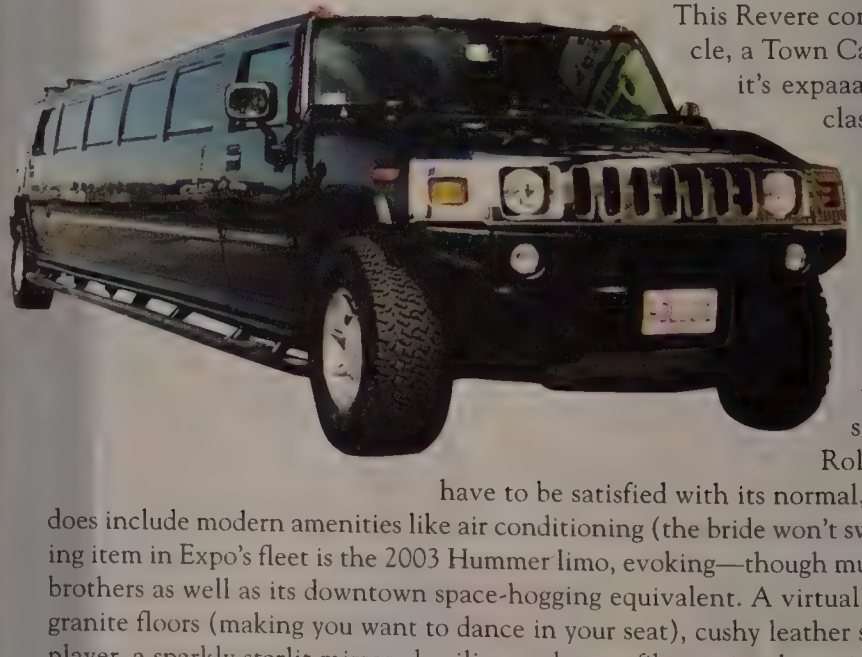
The practice of bringing together culture and chat of all kinds in book clubs has become something of a phenomenon. These Oprah-offsprings rival cocktail parties for ubiquity—and you can drive home safely afterwards too. About 50 such clubs, in Boston and elsewhere, have contributed to this inspired volume. Each club contributes a description of their group and its particular spirit, a review of one book it has read, and a recipe inspired by the book. The Cambridge club the Daughters of Abraham, which was conceived after 9/11, brings together women of three faiths—Judaism, Christianity and Islam. Of the book Reading Lolita in Tehran and its associated food, kolucheh yazdi cake, club member Edie Howe writes, "I think the food stimulated people's taste buds and their spirits and brought us into the mood of going to the Middle East." The clubs range from the deeply brainy classics-reading kind to one called We Just Wanna Have Fun, and the recipes tend toward the exotic and aromatic. The book includes Indian foods (Interpreter of Maladies author Jhumpa Lahiri contributes a recipe for curried hard-boiled eggs); Greek (tzatziki, a cucumber and yogurt dip, is referenced in Middlesex by Jeffrey Eugenides), and Southern gooeys like peanut-butter pie from James McBride's The Color of Water. This book equally inspires you to read, cook, and chew over books and food.

PUFF THE MAGIC BUILDING



MIT's Ray and Maria Stata Center, at the corner of Vassar and Main streets in Cambridge, was designed by Frank Gehry and is the trippiest, most inventive building you'll see anywhere in the Boston area. Lobby open to the public weekdays only.

This is a building you won't want to skip—rather, you'll want to skip around it like a happy child. MIT's new Stata Center, designed by Frank Gehry, is a wobbly looking marvel; it could be the most crooked house in a children's book, playfully off-kilter. But no! Scientific geniuses toil within. Though you can't go to officeland, the vast downstairs area is open and surprisingly depopulated, leaving you free to roam. Each curving section of the lobby presents crazy new angles, and in some spots, sections of what look like parts of an upper floor seem to hang partway down. You look up through a glassy indoor roof to see the underside of a big, fat silvery structure, a pavilion nicknamed the Helmet that resembles an enormous, f wrapped sandwich. When you see it outside, its crazy-quilt shininess reflects the nearby brick bu ings, "askewing" them even more. As if the front (or the many tilting fronts) of the building wer amazing enough, there are more realms in the back. A curving, four-story amphitheater is dotted w comically supine people, their legs angled like the building. One visitor was heard to say, "I make l to this building."

Savona in Suburbia

Lorenzo's toil…Saying cheese… August eats

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Chefs Amanda Lydon of UpStairs on the Square, Pino Maffeo of Restaurant L, Jenny Cates of Bonfire and Gabriel Frasca of Spire are a few of the participants in Boston Restaurant Week.

If Clue were a restaurant board game, the winning answer would be Lorenzo Savona, in a suburban strip mall, with a deep-pocketed software entrepreneur. The popular wine guy, formerly opening partner of Les Zygomates, more recently wine director at UpStairs on the Square, and currently consulting all over the place, plans to open Tomasso Trattoria/Enoteca in Southboro in October.

"Finally, an Italian restaurant," Savona laughs. "I'm the project manager for the build-out, general manager and wine director when we open." But a strip mall in Southboro? "You've got to see it," he says. "It's a really well-done plaza [across from the town reservoir]." Although Savona originally wanted to open his own place in Boston, he found it was far easier to do business in the burbs. "Everybody is so excited here," he says. "In town, I was just another schmo. And the economy is better for a restaurant in the suburbs."

Speaking of economy, Tomasso's owner is Tom Prince, a retired forty-something restaurant enthusiast who invested in Tony Ambrose's Blackfin with the stipulation that he be allowed to work both the front and back of the house in the Boston restaurant. "Tom will be on the floor with me," says Savona, working as part of the team.

Also on the team is "phenomenal" chef Tony Bettencourt, currently wrapping up a stint as executive sous chef at UpStairs on the Square. "He just gets what cooking is all about," enthuses Savona. "He cooks from his heart, he treats the staff well, he knows how to work." Most important, he knows how to realize the potential in the Tuscan-inspired six-course menu that includes "simple, straightforward" dishes such as homemade pastas and roast duck, features local produce and artisanal cheeses, and concludes with "very classic desserts—crostada, house-made panna cotta." Savona's wine program will be "carafe-based," with over 20 Italian wines available by the glass, and bottles from "all over the map." Savona promises a wine tasting every week, a wine dinner every six weeks or so, and a very reasonable price point: It will be possible, he says, to order a full six courses for under $50 per person.

Designed by architect Sandra Fairbank, the 120-seat Tomasso will serve lunch and dinner on weekdays, and dinn on weekend evenings. Savona is especial thrilled by a specifically suburban benef "I'm very excited about not worrying abo parking tickets," he says.

SECOND COURSE

Churn, churn, churn: At first, Matt Ru biner, formerly cheese buyer for Fo maggio Kitchen, thought he'd come u with the perfect name for a café he ar his wife, Julie, planned to open insi their cheese shop in Great Barringto But he changed his mind at the uniform negative response to "Curd." Now, th little eatery that will serve breakfast ar lunch in the back of Rubiner's Chees mongers and Grocery is called Rubi' Rubiner is excited about using the ca "as a showcase for the products in o store" and for local organic eggs, mea and produce. But he's wistful about th original nomenclature. "We still call Curd in the home," he says. Which on goes to prove, where there's a cur there's a whey.

Closer to home for most of us, it's time make your reservations for the fourth annu Boston Restaurant Week (call 888-73 2678 for information). From Aug. 23–2 more than 80 restaurants will offer thre course prix fixe lunches for $20.04 and di ners for $30.04. It's traditionally a slow tir of the year, but given the caliber of partic pating restaurants and the delightful barga price, it's a good idea to book early (a often), before the choice tables are gone. ■

Museums & Galleries: Gods and Athletes

More than 2,700 years after the first Olympics, athleticism, guts and glory are still at the core of the games—like their ancient predecessors, modern-day Olympians compete in boxing, wrestling and, of course, track and field events. Lycra and Coolmax, however, have replaced full frontal nudity as standard athlete attire. While Greece gears up to bring the games back to their native land for the the first time in more than a century, the Museum of Fine Arts celebrates Olympic history old and new with its exhibition Games for the Gods: The Greek Athlete and the Olympic Spirit. Opening July 21, the show features Greek and Roman artifacts, including cups, bowls and coins (circa 500 B.C.) that depict Olympians and the games, as well as photographs by Herb Ritts and John Huet of modern athletes like Jackie Joyner-Kersee and Michael Johnson. Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-369-3448). www.mfa.org. $15, $13 students and seniors.

Sports: Running with the Big Dogs

Imagine a race where beefy men lumber along a course, stopping at aid stations to guzzle beer and chow down on hot dogs. Sounds like something you'd see on Spike TV, but the Big Man Run is an annual tradition born in the streets of Somerville. Now in its ninth year, the Somerville Striders–sponsored event attracts close to 200 big-and-tall participants willing to relive their fraternity hazing days. In addition to enduring a 4.8-mile race, BMR runners are subjected to physical challenges that include consuming an eight-ounce beer and a hot dog (bun included, condiments optional) at three "aid" stations. A sometimes bikini-clad, always all-female volunteer crew conducts the prerace weigh-in (which divides the men into four weight classes, from 190 to 250-plus pounds) and briefs the runners on the BMR Creed: no puking, no cheating, and tipping is mandatory ($1 per runner per aid station). Curiously, the race begins promptly at 4:19 pm (hmmm, what extracurricular activity could that be a reference to?), and once they cross the finish line, all runners are invited to don a Hawaiian shirt and retire to Khoury's State Spa for food, booze and the tranquil sounds of Jimmy Buffett cover band the Electric Parrots. Registration, 2–4:15 pm. $30. Khoury's State Spa, 118 Broadway, Somerville (617-625-2140). www.clydesdale.org.

Company One presents A Clockwork Orange at the BCA.

Performing Arts: Disturbing Drama

If you've seen Stanley Kubrick's 1971 film A Clockwork Orange, you probably can't imagine a more intense viewing experience. But Company One, one of Boston Center for the Arts' theater companies, is staging this ultra-violent story, making the tale of social depravity even more immediate for audiences. The theatrical production was adapted by Anthony Burgess (who wrote the futuristic 1962 novel on which Kubrick's movie was based) for London's Royal Shakespeare Company in 1990, and it's a combination of theater, film and rock and roll. (Company One's production has a new score written and performed by local punk-cabaret duo the Dresden Dolls.) For those who haven't seen the movie or read the book, the plot focuses on a disturbed young man and his gang who go on violent rampages. The play also includes the controversial ending that was cut from the original American edition of Burgess' book. 539 Tremont St., Boston (617-426-2787). $25, $15 students.

JULY 25–AUG. 22

Performing Arts: Very Varekai

What's left for the theater troupe Cirque du Soleil to accomplish, after creating shows that have drawn a total of 42 million spectators, expanding from a staff of 20 to 3,000 and touring nearly 100 cities on four continents? Mass merchandising is what. For its 20th anniversary, Cirque du Soleil is going multimedia. A book (20 Years Under the Sun) about the company's history is due out this fall. The group is also releasing a CD/DVD box set and a compilation CD of music from its shows and is selling all kinds of limited-edition memorabilia online. Luckily, all the products can't overshadow the beauty of Cirque's performances. For its current show, Varekai, taking up residence at Suffolk Downs in July and August, Cirque du Soleil's dramatic acrobatics tell the story of a young wanderer in a magical world called Varekai. Grand Chapiteau, Suffolk Downs, Boston (800-678-5440). $38–$75.

Books & Poetry: War of the Words

Boston poet Mark Lamoureux re
at the Poetry Massa

Massacres and poetry festivals are ideas that seem diametrically opposed. But WordsWorth Books combines the two in its three-day Boston Poetry Massacre, an offshoot of the Boston Summer Poetry Marathons of old that were started by poet Aaron Kiely and carried on by local writers and poets throughout the years. WordsWorth Books events coordinator Jim Behrle, who is hosting the Massacre in Harvard Square for the second time, says, "P marathons, at their best, are brutal events in the best sense. The chance to hear so m poets over such a short period of time can be ecstatic, horrifying, gratifying and ultim inspiring." The edgy festival features local scribes as well as poets from New York Philadelphia, Cincinnati and Milwaulkee, each of whom gets a 12 minute slot to their work. Breaks are scheduled throughout the festival, so poetry fanatics have a ch to chitchat. Behrle says, "Events like this can inspire collaborations, discussions and affairs between poets and participants." All of which are recommended. WordsW Books, 30 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-354-5201).

DOES SIZE MATTER TO YOU?

Well, it does to us.

When it comes to size, we at Metro Realty know that bigger doesn't always mean better. Compared to much larger real estate agencies, we have a select team of hand-picked, highly skilled (and awfully friendly) professionals who won't be happy until you are. And that's just a couple of the reasons why Boston Magazine named us "Best of Boston."

So whether you're looking to buy a new home or thinking of selling your old one, choose Metro Realty, Boston's best boutique real estate agency, to help you out.

Pick up the phone and call us or check out our Web site today. And remember...in the end, it's not the size that counts, it's how you perform that matters.

For the Birds

These Thunderbirds aren't go.

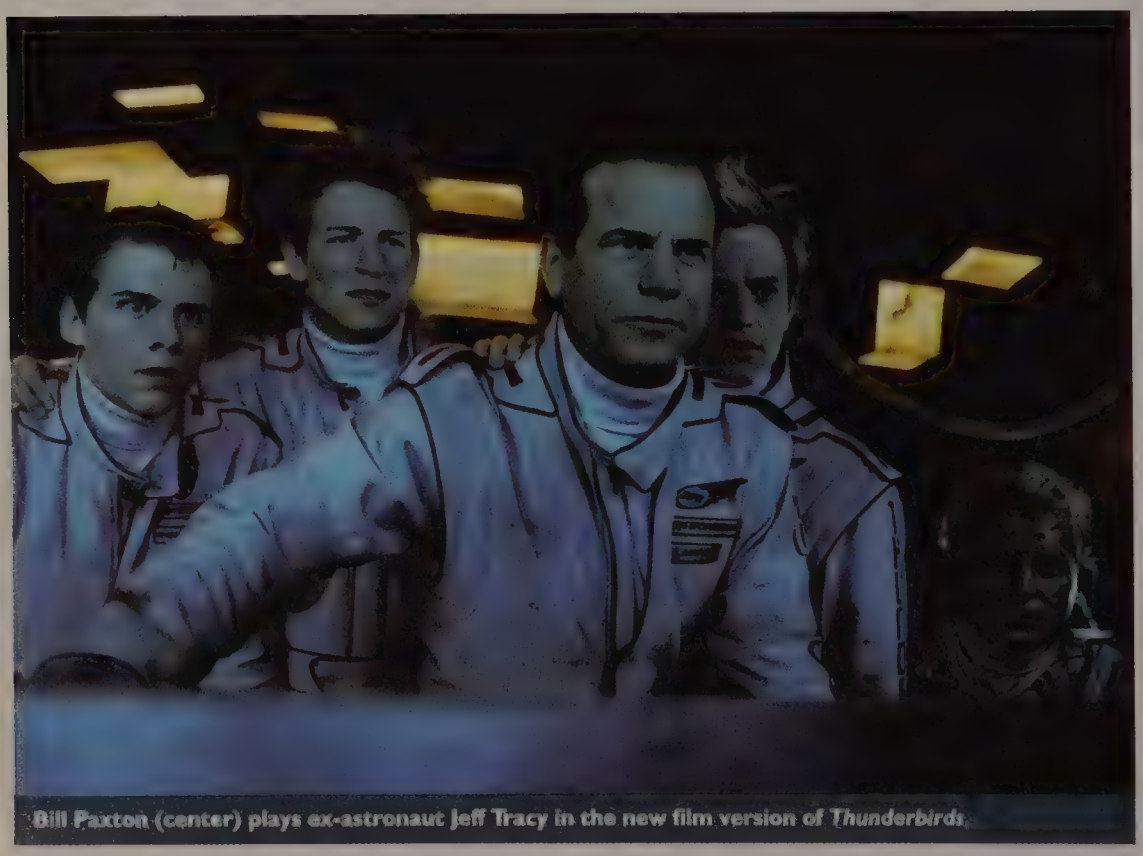
BY PAUL SHERMAN

If you're going to make a Thunderbirds movie, why not make a Thunderbirds movie? Why make a square-jawed, heavily Americanized Spy Kids knockoff out of the kitschy 1960s English TV series?

With its shaky electronic marionettes and its Swinging London visual style, the original Thunderbirds was an instantly cheesy slice of post–James Bond, post–Beatles pop culture. There's a certain charm to its low-tech, save-the-world premise, though I can't ever remember being thrilled enough to sit through an entire rerun of the 1966 show or its movie spin-offs, Thunderbirds Are Go and Thunderbird Six. But in updating the futuristic original into a contemporary, live-action movie, the creators have pushed to the side whatever charm the original Gerry Anderson production had.



Actually, that charm hasn't been so much pushed aside as it's been body-checked. Now, the family behind International Rescue—who are unfazed johnnies-on-the-spot whenever people are in danger on land, sea or air—are Americans, which makes about as much sense as casting Tom Arnold as James Bond. "Billionaire ex-astronaut" widower Jeff Tracy (Bill Paxton) and his bevy of sons come off like the male equivalent of prefab, interchangeable Stepford wives. The whole group offers such an obnoxious, high-fiving caricature of American can-do that you half-expect a shower scene with them all snapping towels at each other. You want to start throwing Ritalin tablets at the screen whenever the whole bunch appears together.

The sons and their bland dad might have been more distinctive were they not just the backdrop for a fluffy coming-of-age story involving the youngest Tracy son. Alan (Brady Corbet) is still stuck in prep school, dying to join the IR squad but sheltered by his protective dad. When the generic villain (Ben Kingsley), who for no apparent reason wants to be known as the Hood, lures the IR team off their secret South Pacific island compound and then invades it when Alan's home on school vacation, the teen and two friends—nerdy schoolmate Fermat (Soren Fulton) and family servant's daughter Tintin (Vanessa Anne Hudgens)—must save the day.

The kids attempt to thwart the Hood's plan to kill the Tracys and use IR's spaceships to rob banks, starting with the Bank of London, where the action soon switches. The 13-year-olds repeatedly elude the bad guy's henchmen—all two of them—and repair sabotaged communication and transportation systems. But there's none of the pizzazz and energy of the Spy Kids movies here. The film even uses absurd cartoon sound effects during its hand-to-hand showdowns, and there's a totally generic puppy love subplot with Alan and Tintin. In the genre of movies made from old TV series, this means Thunderbirds is the rare entry that caters only to those unfamiliar with the original, while offering precious little to those who are familiar with it. In other words, if you're over 12, you won't get much from this.

Despite being filled with characters nominally from the old series, one of the few instances where Thunderbirds references the original is the Tracy's nattily attired comrade Lady Penelope (Sophia Myles), who at least adds a little spice (though her wardrobe here is more aristocratic and less Carnaby Street than on the original show). More of the sparse fun comes from her game Cockney chauffeur, Parker (Ron Cook). And the Tracys' tech man, Brains (Anthony Edwards), a stutterer who's always changing words until one makes it out of his mouth, is rather endearing (and the affectionate father of Fermat).

But what a waste. Why couldn't Jonathan Frakes (who directs this as if it were an Olsen Twins movie) and the writers (whose past credits include the more stylish Austin Powers: The Spy Who Shagged Me and The Scorpion King) have come up with something a little more inclusive and ambitious than the kids' stuff they settled for? What's most surprising is that this Americanized, oatmeal version of Thunderbirds comes from the English production company Working Title (Four Weddings and a Funeral, Love Actually), which isn't a prolific assembly line and usually avoids homogenized projects like this. As souped-up as some of the movies made from TV series are these days, the successful ones still capture some essence of the original, even if it's just cheesiness to spoof. Thunderbirds doesn't even have that. IB

Anchorman ★★★

It's obvious early on that the script here is just loosest peg for hanging gags on, that the charac are one-dimensional and that the story is more terested in heading off on absurd tangents t building much structure or internal logic. It's obvious that those absurd tangents are where movie's real laughs lie, as when Will Ferrell's character and his 1970s San Diego TV news t (Paul Rudd, Steve Carell, David Koechner) ar upon by news teams from other channels who to rumble like West Side Story gangs. Much of the cuse for a story involves the arrival of a female porter (Christina Applegate) who crashes the boys club, and Applegate is as funny as anyone This movie can make Dodgeball look like fi crafted comedy, but plain and simple, it makes laugh. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburb

Before Sunset ★★★

They'll always have Vienna. Nearly a decade Ethan Hawke's and Julie Delpy's characters there and had a one-day fling in Before Sun Richard Linklater's sequel brings them toge again, older and perhaps wiser, in Paris. He's n married author who's written a novel based on fling, while she's had rather poor luck with The spark is still there when they reunite, and big question this time is whether the Amer abroad and the Frenchwoman will act on it. that fateful question must be answered, they en in the same sort of intriguing conversations they in the first film, so this is interesting to sit tho But there's also a great deal of stylistic rehash, the second time around is definitely not as me rable. (At Copley Place and Coolidge Corner.)

The Corporation ★★★

This lengthy but chilling documentary chron how the corporation has gone from an entity w very existence was tightly controlled by governm to one that now often influences governments. of the interview subjects are critics of corp power—including Noam Chomsky, Howard and Michael Moore—but pro-corporate inte also have their say, though the moviemakers g ally give the latter enough rope to hang thems (which they often do). Much of the movie inv large corporations' habit of putting the bottom over public safety, and a good public image over behavior, the sort of thing previously detailed in books as Trust Us We're Experts! and Toxic Slu Good for You! The star of this show, though, is manufacturing tycoon Ray Anderson, who st making his company more environmentally re sible a decade ago and refers to his old way those of most companies as plundering. He hope to this cautionary tale. (At Kendall Squan the Waltham Embassy; starts July 23 at Coo Corner.)

De-Lovely ★½

I don't know why this tin-eared Cole Porter bi phy acts so self-satisfied. It includes a dig a heavily fabricated 1940s Porter biopic that m Cary Grant as the songwriter, and it acts totall erated because, unlike its predecessor, it deals Porter's homosexuality. But this movie feels cated, compromised and just plain confused t casting Kevin Kline any less contrived Grant?). Although Porter's gay romances are ered, his lovers are rather anonymous, while supposed to think the "love of his life" chummy wife (a shrill Ashley Judd) with wh had a marriage of convenience. Meanwhile, di Irwin Winkler can't decide whether to go the modern Moulin Rouge route for the many m numbers, or to be faithful to the song's tim riod—so we get half of them done faithfully, a other half with the "stunt casting" of R Williams, Alanis Morissette and Elvis Co among others, crooning. The top? Hardly Boston Common and Harvard Square.)

Dodgeball: A True Underdog Story ★★★

Forget about "event movies." There's more fun had in this smart "dumb comedy" about a dod showdown between Vince Vaughn's down-to good guys and Ben Stiller's preening bad guys. old coot coaching the heroes says, "If you can a wrench, you can dodge a ball," and there's a lotta dodging and upside-the-head thwack laugh at here. With Stiller and Vaughn swit hero-villain roles from Starsky & Hutch, Ch Taylor as the rifle-armed love interest, Rip T the wizened coot, strong performances fro character actors playing Vaughn's misfit squa cluding Stephen Root and Justin Long) and

Cole and Jason Bateman as the goofballs announcing the action for "ESPN 8 (The Ocho)." (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Door in the Floor ★★

Why do movies keep asking me to care about messed-up upper-middle-class people? In this adaptation of a section of John Irving's A Widow for One Year, a teen (Jon Foster) takes a summer job as an assistant to a successful writer (Jeff Bridges) and gets embroiled in the writer's messy relationship with his separated wife (Kim Basinger). The wife is still numb from the death of the couple's two sons years before, the husband is sleeping around and the teen has the hots for the wife—I think you can do the math. But because the story is told from none of these three characters' perspective, they remain sketchy and remote. Things do perk up in the last half-hour, though, when Bridges starts acting like a higher-tax-bracket version of the Dude, his Big Lebowski character. But I'd rather have just watched that again. (At Kendall Square.)

Fahrenheit 9/11 ★★★1/2

Rabble-rouser Michael Moore's passionate deconstruction of the second Bush administration has no knockout revelations about its controversial policies, so don't expect smoking guns. Its ultimate target is the war in Iraq, but the movie presents the war as just the latest in a pattern of self-serving, law-skirting behavior. Moore comes up with inspired ways of getting his points across about much-debated Bush policies and conflicts of interest. He's onscreen less than he was in Roger & Me, The Big One and Bowling for Columbine, yet he argues such points better than in Columbine. Moore hits his targets because, despite his political aims, he makes you feel like you're watching a movie, not a political rant, and his sense of humor really shines through. (At Boston Common, Harvard Square, Coolidge Corner and suburbs.)

Garden State ★★1/2

The first film by actor-director Zach Braff (TV's Scrubs) has its moments of daffy humor, as Braff plays a struggling L.A. actor who returns to his New Jersey hometown for the first time in nine years. It recaptures the mixed emotions of such a visit, especially of seeing old high school friends, but it treads on very familiar territory. It feels like it wants to be a version of The Graduate directed by Wes Anderson (Rushmore), and it struggles to find any voice of its own. Plus, the story of a guy returning to his hometown who develops a quick bond with a Natalie Portman character has already been done, in 1996's Beautiful Girls. Braff and Portman have a pleasing chemistry, and Braff is to be commended for trying to make something quirky and personal. But it's hard not to feel this movie is redundant. (Opens Aug. 6 at Kendall Square.)

Zach Braff, formerly of TV's Scrubs, directs and stars in Garden State

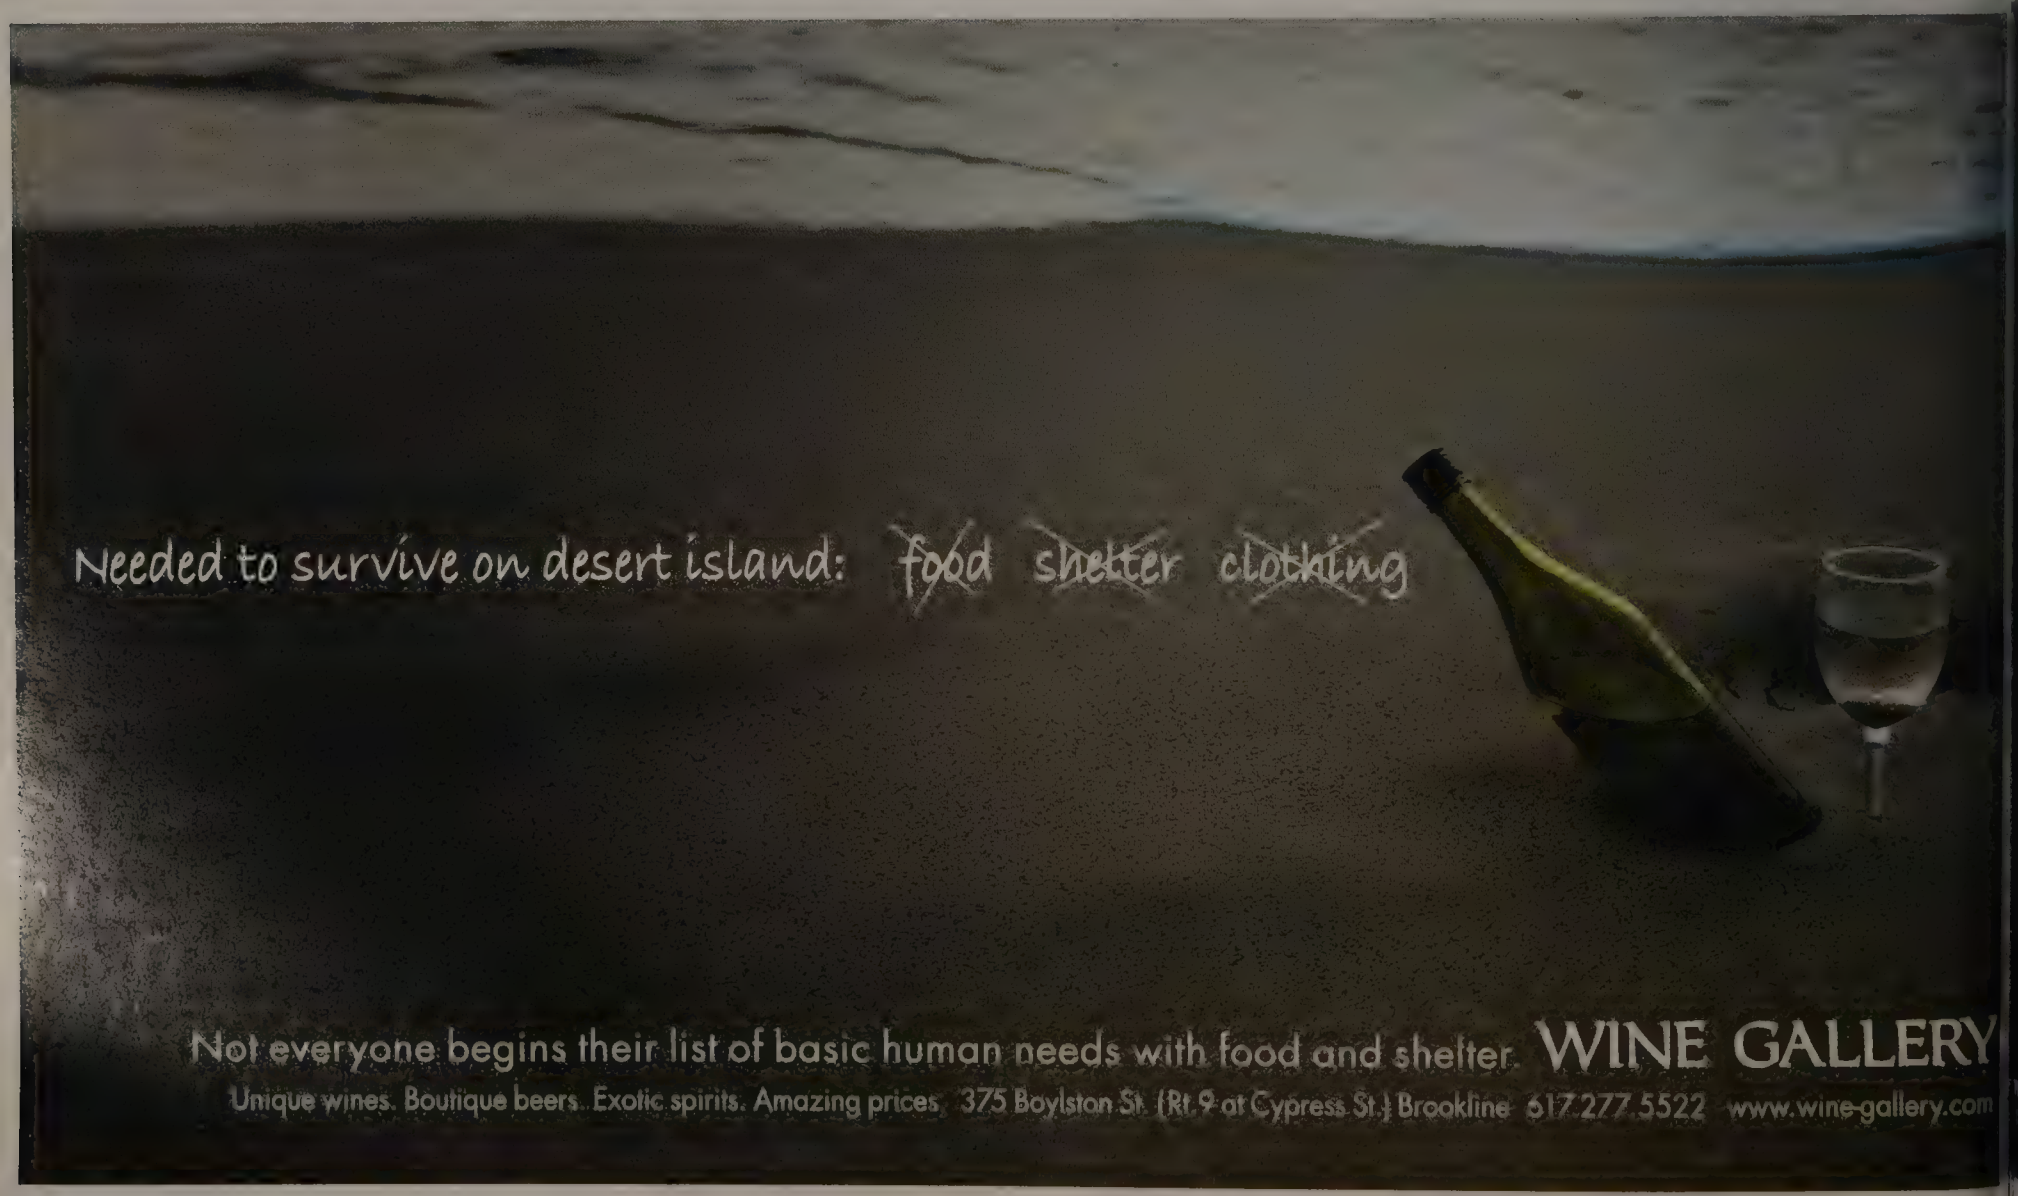
Metallica: Some Kind of Monster ★★★

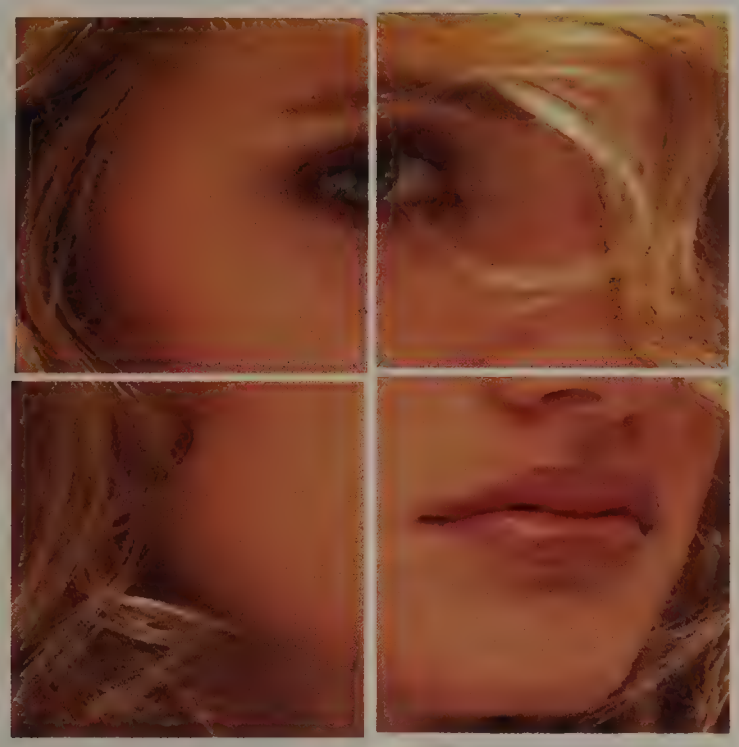
It's interesting enough to keep nonfans of heavy metal involved, though this 145-minute documentary about the making of Metallica's St. Anger album is longer than it needs to be. What's interesting is that the latest by directors Joe Berlinger and Bruce Sinofsky (Paradise Lost) is the most psychological of rock movies. Literally. Reeling from the deterioration of their personal relationships, the band's three core members enter counseling with a "performance enhancement therapist" and strive to make the band a democracy, so their Dr. Phil–like shrink is there at all the recording sessions—sometimes easing tensions, sometimes adding to them. As drummer Lars Ulrich sums it up, those sessions are an attempt to make "aggressive music without negative energy," which isn't easy, especially when macho frontman James Hetfield (who enters rehab during the sessions) and more emotional Ulrich keep struggling for control of the band. They should've called this 12 Steps to Metal. (At Kendall Square.)

She Hate Me ★



Spike Lee's latest—yes, its title takes inspiration from the XFL player who dubbed himself "He Hate Me"—starts out like an unsatisfying example of Lee's recent ragged storytelling. As with Bamboozled starts with an intriguing premise, this time ab young black exec (Anthony Mackie) at a comp where an Enron-like scandal is about to explode, then it drifts and drifts. After a half hour Lee lose terest in that corporate plot and switches to unir esting, poorly written character drama. Only time the poor drama stretches to utterly ted lengths, with periodic stops on a half dozen clu soapboxes. And the subplot involving lesbians be the single most bogus piece of male-penned "f ninity" in decades. A sure contender for the y worst. (Opens Aug. 6 at Kendall Square.)

Spider-Man 2 ★★★



Remove the least effective element from Sp Man—Willem Dafoe's puzzling, uninteresting G Goblin—and it's no surprise Sam Raimi's sequ better. Of the several comic-book adaptation give us crime-fighters with troubled pasts and mi emotional baggage, like Daredevil and The Hulk, is clearly the best. That's for the same reasons best parts of the first movie clicked: the depth T Maguire, Kirsten Dunst and James Franco brir their characters, the fun physical release of th tion scenes, and the bold comic-book charge o zingy tabloid editor played by J.K. Simmons. movie is proof positive that not only can e movies be smart and emotionally complex, should be. Raimi has already made one fine se Evil Dead 2, and its inimitable star Bruce Cam has a very funny cameo here. Now Raimi's do again. (At Boston Common, Fenway and subur

The Terminal ★★

The story of an Eastern European forced to live i Airport's international terminal might have b breezy little comedy, but it becomes an overbl overextended tale in Steven Spielberg's latest. Hanks plays the poor fellow who lands in diplo limbo after a coup topples his country while h route to New York. The U.S. won't recognize his port and won't allow him to enter the country n turn home. The hero is needlessly cute and und ening, and the story's reach for big moments is u unsuccessful. Meanwhile, the movie seems comfortable that its presentation of a microco America is, essentially, a mall. (At Boston Com Fenway, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

GREAT 8 BURGERS

Phantom knows where the beef is. It's nestled in a toasted bun, topped with lettuce, tomato, and onion. Phantom salutes eight great burger joints.

The Greatest: Twenty Minute Burger
R.F. O'SULLIVAN'S PUB
282 Beacon St., Somerville, MA 02143 (617) 492-7773
Phantom heads to R.F. O'Sullivan's Pub for thick, juicy, mouth-watering burgers at their jaw-breaking best. Each belly-busting beast is a half pound of ground sirloin that requires twenty minutes on the grill. O'Sullivans is also one of the only restaurants that will actually serve a burger the way Phantom likes it - RARE! The menu lists two dozen versions like the Black and Blue coated in fresh ground black pepper, topped with blue cheese.

The Greatest: Homemade Burger Sauces
JOE SENT ME...
2388 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, MA 02140 (617) 492-1116
www.joe-sent-me.com
Joe Sent Me... pairs excellent pub grub with cool brews. The scene brightens with a wall of bottle caps and a spirited crowd. Phantom loves the sensational ten ounce burgers topped with homemade sauces like Honey Mustard or BBQ Ale. The Rio Grande sizzles with salsa and cheddar, while the North Ender packs on the onions, peppers, and mushrooms. Regulars can even join the Mug Club and keep an engraved beer stein at the bar.

The Greatest: No Frills Burger
TIM'S BAR AND GRILL
329 Columbus Ave., Boston, MA 02116 (617) 247-7894
Tim's Bar and Grill is a dank, dingy South End dive bar with one of the biggest burgers around. The half pound, two-handed artery poppers are chargrilled and heaped onto a bulky roll. The kitchen even grinds its own meat and hand shapes the patties. Forget fancy toppings! It's a basics-only burger situation that foregoes extravagance for quantity. Plus, they're ridiculously cheap, ranging from $4.75 to $7. This is THE reason to drop everything and head to Tim's.

The Greatest: Toppings
FUDDRUCKERS
Saugus, MA and North Andover, MA www.fuddruckersNE.com
At Fuddruckers, burgers come in four different sized patties that reach up to one gigantic pound. But, hey, size doesn't matter. It's the toppings that make these burgers special. There's a complimentary Produce Bar loaded with everything from lettuce, tomato, and onion to nacho cheese, salsa, and jalapenos. Smoked bacon, homemade chili, and guacamole are a little extra. After throwing back a Double Trouble Chocolate Shake and a human head sized burger, no one leaves Fuddruckers hungry.

The Greatest: Grilled Onions
WHITE HUT
280 Memorial Ave., West Springfield, MA 01089 (413) 736-9390
www.whitehut.com
White Hut has sawdust-covered floors, twelve floor mounted stools along a Formica counter, and an open kitchen that cooks to order. Their outstanding cheeseburger starts as an ordinary griddle patty on a soft white bun, but then it's topped with a mass of luscious fried onions. These golde strings are slowly cooked on the back of the stove, where they caramelize into a heavenly sweet sensation.

The Greatest: Burger Selection
BARTLEY'S BURGER COTTAGE
1246 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge, MA 02138 (617) 354-6559
www.mrbartleys.com
Bartley's Burger Cottage is nearly part of the Harvard curriculum, with fun dorm room décor and modest plastic patio seating. Their incredible hamburger selection expands with dozens of celebrity named creations. The Viagra rises to the occasion with blue cheese and bacon, while the up-to-par Tiger Woods stacks cheddar and guacamole. The creepy Stephen King is mysteriously delicious with Muenster cheese. Sweet Potato Fries and a Peppermint Patty Frappe are required, not elective.

The Greatest: Three Pound Burger
EAGLE'S DELI & RESTAURANT
1918 Beacon St., Brighton, MA 02135 (617) 731-3232
www.ezpress.com/eaglesdeli.htm
Eagle's Deli makes one heck of a mean burger that few dare attempt to conquer. Named after a regular with a mammoth appetite, the Reilly Burger is a serious stacking of six half pound patties topped with twelve slices of cheese, all held together by a wooden teriyaki stick. It comes with five pounds of fries and unlimited fountain soda. Ask the guys behind the greasy grill what you'll get for eating the whole thing, and they'll tell you. Indigestion!

The Greatest: Veggie Burger
COMMON GROUND BAR & GRILL
85 Harvard Ave., Allston, MA 02134 (617) 783-2071
The Common Ground is an Irish pub that jams out to local bands while tending a steady flow of brews. The baseball cap crowd comes for continual sports TV but sticks around for intriguing menu items like Boston's best Veggie Burger. Made from mashed lentils and lima beans, it's fattened with Asian bread crumbs, pan fried until crispy, and served on a roll with lettuce, tomato, pickle, and yummy pesto mayo. The mashed potato Irish Pizza is equally innovative.

Root of the Blues

Corey Harris builds connections between Africa and America

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Corey Harris charted his path as a modern bluesman through his anthropology studies at Bates College in Maine. "That helped mainly for me to first start thinking of other places on the map," says Harris, 35. "That's how I widened my perspective, and I was able to go to those places."

Harris and his 5x5 band play two New England shows in early Aug.

As a foreign-exchange student, the Denver native traveled to Cameroon in 1990, and returned to Africa a year later for a 10-month fellowship. "I was really studying how people use language in political campaigns," he says.

Today, Harris studies the language of the blues as an acclaimed singer, guitarist and songwriter versed in the traditional acoustic style as well as the funky, eclectic blues of his 5x5 band, which plays an Aug. 7 set at the Apple & Eve Newport Folk Festival. They'll warm up for that show with a free Aug. 5 performance on a barge outside the Boston Harbor Hotel.

The blues took him back to Africa a few more times, one as a host for Martin Scorsese's recent PBS series The Blues—specifically for the Scorsese-directed episode "Feel Like Going Home"—and for his latest CD, Mississippi to Mali.

"I was thinking of doing a separate record of me playing with musicians from Africa, and then I was thinking of doing a record with blues elders in the States," says Harris, "and I thought, why not do a record with both?"

So the CD features tracks in Mali with guitar great Ali Farka Toure and other African musicians, as well as songs with musicians in Mississippi, including the Rising Star Fife and Drum Band. The latter group was to feature fife and drum master Otha Thomas, who died a week before the sessions, prompting his 12-year-old granddaughter and protégé Sharde Thomas to step in on fife, an instrument that is a strong part of African traditions.

"I wanted to show other people how these things can go together and sound right," says Harris, who contributed a few of the disc's original songs, which complement reworked traditional tunes. "We don't have to force it."

"It's like branches of a tree, and these people are closer to the root," he says. "But don't get me wrong. The music that they're playing is modern music. They're not playing even their traditional songs the same way they were being played a hundred years ago. And with Ali Farka Toure, even though the music sounds very old, almost all of the tunes he wrote are about things happening today."

Much the way he recorded on a front porch in Mississippi, Harris traveled to Toure's house in remote Niafunke, Mali, to record with a simple rig that made the session more like a field recording. "In a technical sense, I guess it was, but it was a field recording of a different kind," Harris says. "We definitely talked on the real about issues that face us and things that we have in common as black people.

"You've got to keep it true and talk about what you know," he says from Virginia, his home since 1997, following five years in Louisiana. "That's all anyone else did in their modern times. If you look at someone like Robert Johnson, he wasn't an old man singing that stuff. There were no old men singing like him when he was a kid. When he was in his twenties, no men played like he did. He was a young lion. It's young people's music from a long time ago."

Harris was exposed to music from an early age. His family's listening habits ran from Dinah Washington and Ray Charles to Muddy Waters and the Ohio Players. "At my house, there wasn't really a difference between jazz, blues and R&B," he says, "and I'd listen to music in church.

"I just looked at it as my expression and where my people came from," says Harris, who related to folk-blues more than the guitar heroics of Stevie Ray Vaughan. "My family came from the South, and that was like down-home music."

"One of the big myths is that people make money—and some people make a whole lot of money—in music," says Harris, who compares the business to contract labor he has done over the years as a carpenter and stone mason. "I look at it as something like construction. There's a high overhead with a lot of costs. Your contract might seem large, but when you figure in all of your expenses—and the music-entertainment industry has some of the highest overheads of any industry with the plane tickets, the hotels and the food—your take-home pay is smaller. I don't do it for the money. If I was, I would be doing something else." iB

Corey Harris & the 5x5
play the Boston Harbor Hotel Aug. 5 and the Apple & Eve Newport Folk Festival Aug. 7.

The Last Phish Fry

New England phenomenon says goodbye on its own terms.

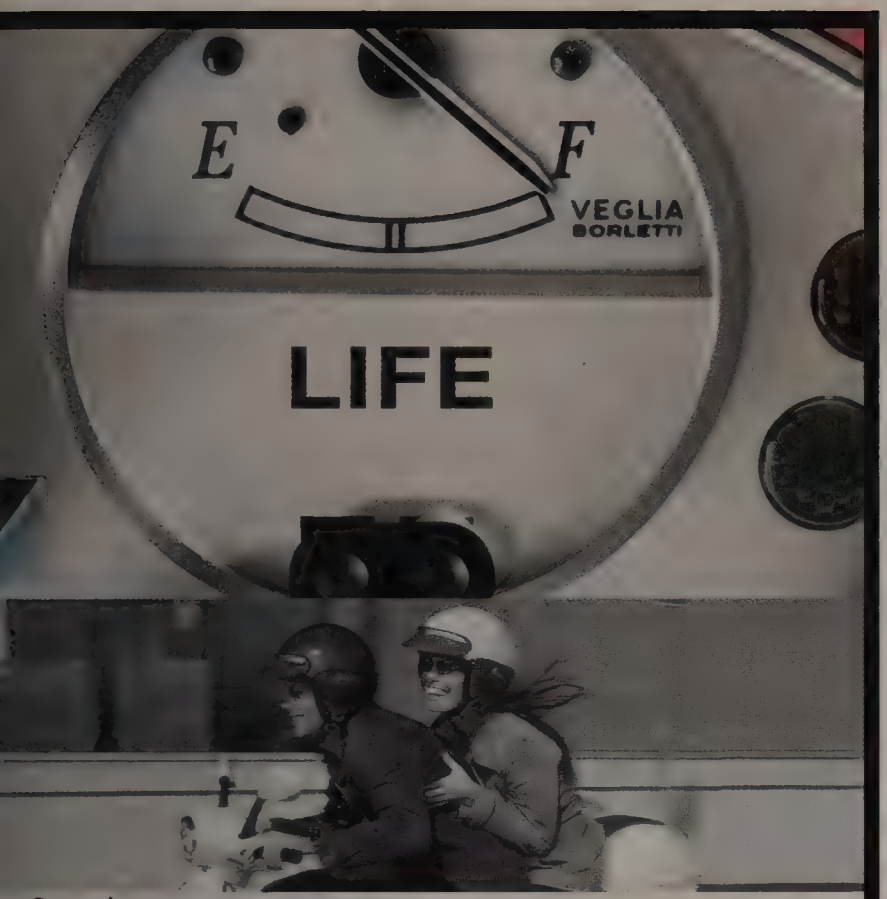
Phish's "Golgi Apparatus" peaks with the chorus "I saw you, with a ticket stub in your hand!" And after Phish plays its last note Aug. 15 at a homestate festival in Coventry, Vt., that'll be all fans have left, along with cherished live downloads and Undermind, the band's new CD swan song.

Consider that Phish singer-guitarist Trey Anastasio wrote lyrics for "Golgi Apparatus" in the eighth grade, and you may understand why he wants to move on from Phish. It's been a 21-year-long, strange trip from loopy college band to multi-million-dollar touring phenomenon that redefined the course for a new generation of jambands.

"We don't want to become caricatures of ourselves, or worse yet, a nostalgia act," Anastasio wrote in a seismic post on phish.com that noted Coventry will be the final Phish show, capping a week of dates that begins at the Tweeter Center Aug. 10-11. So not to confuse the occasion with a hiatus for solo projects in 2001-2002, he added, "We're done."



Try as Phish might, its newer songs had trouble standing up to early art-rock suites like "You Enjoy Myself" and "Harry Hood," which belied the fugue-loving Anastasio's grounding as a classically influenced composer. And while Undermind captures the quartet's fluid, organic feel as well as any studio release, thanks to producer Tchad Blake (Los Lobos, the Bad Plus), albums still fail to rival Phish's live alchemy—even if that alchemy became less dependable.

Phish set a high bar for itself through the '90s. Much of the magic was conceptual: The band covered entire albums (including the Beatles' White Album and Talking Heads' Remain i Light) as Halloween "costumes," and took its jams out of body and back again. But Phish's lasting legacy may be its campout festivals, the model in structure and vibe for events like Bonnaroo. Coventry can never match Big Cypress, where the quartet played a midnight-to-dawn Everglades set to greet the new millennium, but it's a fitting place for a finale.

Most bands aren't so brave as to kill the cash cow by choice. But after Jerry Garcia die in 1995, Phish drummer Jon Fishman told me, "If anyone in the band goes, then it's over." And no matter to what degree he, keyboardist Page McConnell and bassist Mike Gordon agree with Anastasio (and Gordon didn't want to disband), they know Phish is the sum o its parts. If even one member's heart is no longer in it, the result is the same—save one last raging week of Phishtory. Tweeter Center Aug. 10-11 and Coventry Aug. 14-15.

Light The Night® Walk
Registration begins at 4:30 p.m. Walk begins at 6:30 p.m.

LIGHT THE NIGHT WALK®

The Leukemia & Lymphoma Society

Light The Night is The Leukemia & Lymphoma Society's nationwide evening walk to celebrate and commemorate lives touched by cancer. Anyone can participate. This is a casual walk with no fitness requirements. All fundraising walkers carry illuminated balloons. Participants carry red balloons and our survivors carry white balloons as a symbol of hope.

For more information on how to join the Walk or to attend the Kick Off Party on August 12th with Honorary Chair Boston Red Sox President Larry Luchino, please call (800) 688-6572 or visit our website at www.lightthenight.org/ma.

Funds raised support our mission to cure leukemia, lymphoma, Hodgkin's disease and myeloma, and to improve the quality of life of patients and their families.

Infinite Mementos

Approximately 125 days have transpired since our last conversation. I have endured constant internal strife during this period, fighting a war with no apparent, peaceful resolution. I need you to know that I hated what I had to do and wish with all my passion that I could figure out a way to mend our lacerated relationship. It's hard for me to walk through this city as I am incessantly haunted by past dreams and memories: those pennies lying on the ground that you would pounce on like a sleek, furtive cat; the inescapable Starbucks, and your tiny smirk as you proudly proclaimed our mutual addiction; the Thai restaurants and the aroma of curry wafting through the air as I watched you inhale a massive dish of food with an utter disregard for etiquette that can only be obtained around the most intimate of friends; and even this very magazine, to which I was totally oblivious until you came into my life. You always mentioned your love for this column and your desire to see yourself portrayed. As you read these words now, please forgive me and know that I want to be friends again. Even though things will never be the same, you're too much of a positive influence and a stunningly beautiful person to erase completely from my life.

—JamesRussLowell@aol.com

Waggling Eyebrows in Davis

It was Friday morning, June 25. We were walking in opposite directions in Davis Square. You waggled your eyebrows at me and I smiled. You asked me for the time and told me I had a nice smile. I was totally flustered, and you called me on it. I denied you a walk with me and I wish I hadn't. If you'd like, contact me. Welcome to town, I hope you don't miss D.C. too much.

—smileindavis@yahoo.com

Biker

To the cyclist who rode by the Longwood T stop the evening of June 25 and told the waiting commuters to "Have fun, assholes!": I'm so glad you are fortunate (and rich) enough to live within biking distance of work, but for the rest of us who are stuck daily waiting 25 minutes to begin our 40 minute commute packed into cattle cars, we were obviously not having fun. But rather than commending us on not driving dangerous, cyclist-hitting SUVs into work, you chose to laugh and insult our use of public transportation. Your words were cruel, but the advice was sound—next time, one of those "assholes" may have a little more "fun" watching you fly ass-over-handlebars when an umbrella is "accidentally" tossed into the spokes of your wheels.

—P'd on the T

Sorry

When we first spoke I thought we had a lot in common and then we met. I couldn't believe how beautiful you were, your smile, your eyes and your personality. I really thought we hit it off, but then you started ignoring me. When we finally spoke you started making up excuses about why you wouldn't talk to me. It hurt but I got over it. I possibly said some stupid things (I know I said some stupid things) but now I'm sorry. I'm sorry we couldn't talk more, I'm sorry I won't be able to see your beautiful eyes anymore and I'm sorry I can't at least be your friend. Whenever you're ready to speak with me again, I will always be there.

—devon3@comcast.net

You're an Angel

Thank you, to the sweet, genuine and caring young girl (wearing a green Tulane sweatshirt) who offered a kind word to me and comfort when I was frazzled outside of the Starbucks in Newtonville. I was all agitated and stressed out and you so kindly offered to help me in my time of need. I had just been through a horrible experience at a very stressful time, so you just being so sweet made me appreciate that there are some good peeps out there, especially when I think most people suck crap. Thank you again. You are a good soul and put some light in my dark day. You're an angel!

Blue Eyes in the Sky

You were the tall dark guy in the grey ribbed pullover, standing in the lounge at Top of the Hub with the city lights behind you. I was the blond in the white linen jacket, having dinner with my best friend and her fiancé. He was a bore, but you and I seemed to click after I caught your eye, and we later made small talk by the elevator when I was waiting for my friend to come back from the restroom. You didn't seem to be with anyone. I wished you had asked me to join you for a glass of wine. I don't know how often you're at Top of the Hub, but I work near the Pru. Any chance we might meet again for the drink we should have had in the first place? I'd love to look into those blue eyes of yours over a Grey Goose martini sometime. This could be the start of someth nice, no?

Improper?

It was the night of July 6. You w dressed in a pink shirt and sand sitting on the Red Line, heading toward Ashmont. rockie horoscope

JULY 21 – AUGUST 10, 2004 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

LEO JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Lions, more than most signs, are aware that sometimes even royalty has to pay to play, and that you might as well have joy in your heart while you're running up a tab. Just a reminder because a lot of your time and energy could be devoted to making your loved ones happy over the next three weeks, while lucky Jupiter, indulgent Venus and passionate Pluto hook up. Even casual friends can benefit from the abundance of gifts and special treats being tossed around. Petty jealousies are to be expected, so try to play fair.

VIRGO
AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

Good friends or "just friends"? All summer long, colleagues and acquaintances could pop up, sometimes when it's convenient, more often when it's not. Even if you intend to spend time alone (especially once your Mercury ruler turns retrograde in your sign on August 9), trips down memory lane are likely to be shared with somewhat significant others from your past. Because generous, jolly Jupiter is in your sign, you can't help but extend yourself, and because affable Venus and manipulative Pluto are vying for your attention, you could wind up feeling used and abused.

LIBRA
SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Don't let the Cancer new-moon energy slip by without directing some of it toward a career goal you can get behind come autumn. It's not that you're presently preoccupied with fun-in-the-sun activities or, more likely, inactivity. But there's a good chance that you'll be called out of town to attend to pleasurable business. If so, keep tabs on your expenses, because when there's tension between enthusiastic Jupiter and your amenable Venus ruler, the bills quickly pile up and it gets harder to say no to anything or anyone you fancy.

SCORPIO
OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

No doubt the psychic Scorpio has seen it coming, and in your own quiet way, has prepared for its arrival. What? The rewarding trine between Mars and Pluto, your co-ruling planets. What will make this event on the 25th more memorable than others that have come before is the fiery, passionate nature of their liaison. There's also the possibility of cashing in big-time, simply because the planets are aligned in your second house of income and your tenth house of worldly success and the family's good name. Congratulations.

SAGITTARIUS
NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

The passion you were promised should hit like the proverbial "thunderbolt" when horny Mars in Leo favors passionate Pluto in your sign. Their connection could be a bit rough, so be prepared for high drama instead of warm hugs and civilized conversation. Once again, because your expansive Jupiter ruler is busy making plans for the next stage of your career, affectionate Venus in your house of partners can make those folks feel neglected. Trust that the goddess will demand that you pay dearly for any oversight.

CAPRICORN
DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

You seem unable to extricate yourself from the pervasiveness of "we" rather than "me" consciousness. Not to worry; after the sun moves out of your Cancer complement on the 22nd and before magnetic Venus moves in on August 7, you should be able to focus on what's unique about yourself and how you can make those qualities known to a wider audience. You'll have plenty of time to research the project because publicity-minded Mercury turns retrograde on August 9 in your house of other people's resources. Start your search for potential benefactors/investors soon.

AQUARIUS
JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Take time to figure out where you want to be at the end of July when the second full moon of the month, the blue moon, is in Aquarius. These relatively rare lunar events are special occasions that deserve suitable, well-thought-out celebrations. Since it's your turn to "howl at the moon," make sure everyone who counts can hear you. Other people' expectations, their reactions and respect tend to have a stronger effect on you and a significant other during solar Leo than at other times of the year. Put on a good show.

PISCES
FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Caught in the crossfire again or is your current situation to much of a good thing? Either way, you're liable to be stressed out by too many promises as Venus and Jupiter, th two "benefics," attempt to outdo each other. Between bein the object of your family's best intentions and a partner's generosity, Fish can easily feel that the squeeze is on. Although a long, deep-sea dive would take you far away from the competitive vibe, realistically, you can't succumb to the temptation to hide out. Or can you?

ARIES
MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Check out Web sites offering low-cost, high-risk trips you can sign up for immediately. You may get a similar opportunity to direct the high-spirited energy of your Mars ruler toward another once-or-twice-in-a-lifetime adventur in 2006, but why wait? This is an excellent time to test the limits of your curiosity and love of a challenge. Plus you have the support of security-conscious Pluto to see you get back home in one piece. However, first make sure you don' get sidetracked by a dramatic plea for attention from a colleague, your boss, or worse, a parent.

TAURUS
APRIL 20–MAY 20

No matter where you go camping this summer, you're not out of the woods until your Venus ruler returns to the spot which it turned retrograde in mid May. That red-letter day arrives on August 2, right after the blue moon. Until then, keep track of the intelligence that keeps accruing, especiall your insights into a more flexible value system. While the family becomes more rigid in their demands as more plane gather in Leo, a fixed sign like your own, you may prefer to experiment with attractive alternatives. Conflict?

GEMINI
MAY 21–JUNE 20

A diplomatic Libra or Taurus can bring a relationship issue a head and help you discover what, up to now, you've refus to see. Or what has been systematically kept from you. Interesting action for the ever-curious Twins, no? Money might not figure prominently in the puzzle, but you should still pay attention to the pluses and minuses of each materi and emotional transaction, at least until your Mercury rule begins its next retrograde trip Aug. 9. Be aware that what happens from now until then will probably have to be revis

CANCER
JUNE 21–JULY 22

Like your birthday wish, the annual Cancer new moon offe another opportunity to focus purely on what you want for yourself. Not something that'll please others; no deal with the devil that'll guarantee the success of your latest projec nothing to enhance your reputation in the community or among your friends. Not high hopes for your financial futt either, although Mercury in your Leo money house is demanding that, no matter what else you do this summer, you pay attention to the small stuff or it'll come back to haunt you.

GIRLS FROM GOOD HOMES...

The Old Guard observed a time-honored tradition at the charmingly anachronistic evening known as the Boston Cotillion, a debutante ball held at the Park Plaza, where daughters of the city's first families are formally introduced to society.

This year's crop of dewy young things included Caroline MacMillan Babcock, Carina Alexandra Berlin, Elizabeth Avery Caraboolad, Alexandra Catharine Ebling, Victoria Mullen Fillat, Louise Lovell Hill and Victoria Dumaresq Whitney—all looking startlingly grown-up in strapless white gowns.

Before the ball, their families hosted private dinners at various locales around town; for instance, Tom and Vicky Whitney of Chestnut Hill (a.k.a. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas H.P. Whitney—the H.P. stands for Handasyd Perkins, as in the 19th-century China trader) entertained a raft of their own and their daughters' friends at an intimate get-together at the Chilton Club (that bastion of Brahmin femininity on the corner of Comm. Ave. and Dartmouth Street). Lest it sound hopelessly stuffy, the party was leavened by lots of witty toasts and amusing touches like the Barbie doll cakes with edible, pink-frosted hoopskirts.

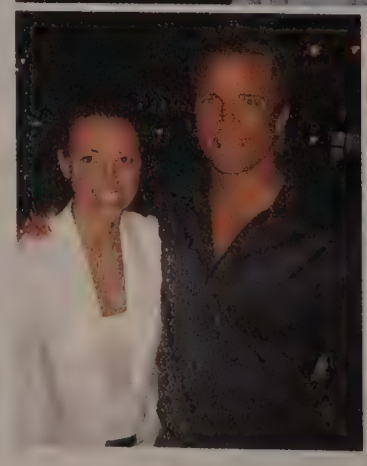
Then it was on to the main event, where blue-blooded éminence grise Michael Robbins introduced the Receiving Committee (a group of prominent women with whom each debutante shakes hands), followed by the girls themselves. They were accompanied by two socially acceptable young men and escorted by their beaming fathers, who walked them under an arch of white flowers, down a flight of steps, and onto the dance floor, where they waltzed to "Thank Heaven for Little Girls."

Taking all this in were such Social Register types as Mary Kay and Nicholas Holder; Gale Minot and her daughter, Amory; Cokie and Lee Perry with Cokie's sister, Anne Ireland; the ravishingly, fall-at-her-feet gorgeous Cassandra Irvine and her adoring other half, Hod; flawless Southern belle Winston Jenkins; statuesque brunette Julie Hume Sprague; incorrigible scamp Richard Babson; eminent M.D. Gardner Jackson; assorted presidential relatives—including escort Walker Bush Ellis and committee member Candace Roosevelt; the evening's honoree, Jan Schifen of the Vincent Memorial Hospital at MGH; a young man wearing a tuxedo and flip-flops, and a resourceful woman whose air-conditioning had been broken all week but who finally got a repairman to come to her house by saying, "Just don't get here between 12 and 5, because that's when the girls will be sunbathing topless by the pool."

Among the evening's memorable comments: "You're just lucky your daughter isn't Paris Hilton," "This is a roomful of hormones pretending to be in control," and "We live in Cambridge, so we have to be careful when we say, 'Our daughter's coming out.'"

All in all, a lovely evening, and it can safely be said that there's never been a group of young ladies so lovely or poised...until next year, that is.

KEEPING THE WORLD SAFE FOR YELLOW LABS AND FRISBEE PLAYERS...

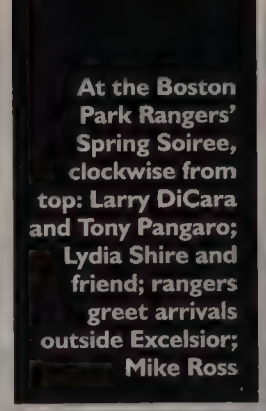


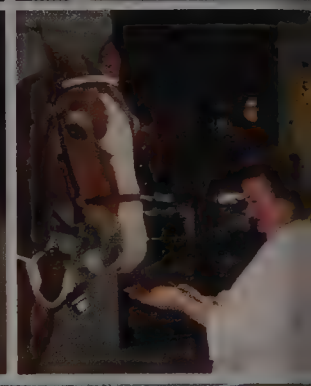
They look so picturesque patrolling the city's green spaces on horseback that it's only fitting the Boston Park Rangers were feted at a Spring Soiree hosted by Mayor Menino and parks commissioner Toni Pollak at the super-swank eatery Excelsior.

On hand for the summery reception were the likes of Back Bay glamazon Beth Dickerson; real estate titan Jed Raymond and his son, Jared; developer Tony Pangaro; lawyer-at-large Larry DiCara; mayoral right-hand man Harry Collings; Republican publican Tom Kershaw of Cheers; preppy do-gooder Peggy Dray; and celebrity chef Lydia Shire, who went outside with a bunch of gourmet baby carrots that she hand-fed to the horses stationed at the restaurant's entrance.

"Can't the horses come inside?" asked one guest, to which someone else replied, "No, but a few horses' asses already have."

However, the evening's wittiest remark came from a woman who was asked if she knew someone, to which she replied, "Yes, we're related by marriage...I'm his wife."





At Anthony's Pier 4, top: Josh Meyers and Bobby Wahlberg. Bottom, from left: Susan Brubaker and David Chokachi; Steve Burton

At the Boston Park Rangers' Spring Soiree, clockwise from top: Larry DiCara and Tony Pangaro; Lydia Shire and friend; rangers greet arrivals outside Excelsior; Mike Ross

EAT, DRINK AND MAKE MERRY...

It was a surprisingly glitzy crowd that turne out at Anthony's Pier 4 for a silent auctio and dinner dance to support Parents fo Residential Reform and the Federatio for Children with Special Needs.

Seen milling about before sitting dow for dinner were the evening's honoree state auditor Joe DeNucci, sports ancho Steve Burton and his wife, Ginny; fo mer governor Michael Dukakis; his fo mer right-hand woman, Marjorie Cla prood; Newton mayor David Cohe Boston's own Bobby Wahlberg (who w greeted at the door by a woman who h flown all the way from Canada just catch a glimpse of him); Baywatch hun David Chokachi and his gorgeous ancée, Gucci executive Susan Brubake Mad TV's Josh Meyers; radio personali JJ Wright (the evening's emcee); stand comic and hairstylist Patrice Vinci; a force of nature Andrea Watson, who ganized the event and was repeatedly ferred to throughout the evening as woman you just can't say no to."

Drinks and dinner were followed by a f more drinks and plenty of dancing, and the time everyone went home, it was cl that although many of them spend th days helping disadvantaged kids, these pe ple know how to cut loose and have a go time once the sun goes down. IB

FROM THE EDITOR

ON THE TOWN

While every issue of the IMPROPER is stocked with tips and information designed to boost your social life, this is the first issue we've devoted exclusively to nightlife. And since we already publish issues that focus on dining, dating, music and the arts, we're using these pages to home in on the establishments at the center of the nightlife scene: bars and clubs.

Throughout the year, we get calls and e-mails from readers looking for advice on where to go dancing, celebrate a special occasion with friends, or hang with a crowd that's outgrown sports bars and flaming shots, and we kept those FAQs in mind as we planned our feature stories. Our lineup includes a look at the newest theme nights at local clubs (for the dance-phobic, there are even some nights just for lounging), a guide to bars with a thriving scene for the 35-and-over set, and suggestions for alternative ways to spend an evening—from campy drag shows to wholesome piano sing-alongs. Finally, our "field guide" to Boston barflies takes a tongue-in-cheek (and shamelessly stereotypical) look at some of the characters you might encounter out on the town.

A BOSTON'S-BEST FEST

I thought your Boston's Best issue was one of your best yet! I have a couple of suggestions for next year: Wouldn't it be neat if the IMPROPER put out two separate covers—one with a beautiful girl and another with a beautiful guy? There seem to be many more covers featuring women than men—equality would be nice.

Also, Mr. Bartley's does make a good hamburger, and I can't fault the interesting selection. But in my humble opinion, the absolute best burger in Boston is on the Abe & Louie's lunch menu. Unlike just about every other burger joint in town, Abe & Louie's burgers are made from the same dry-aged sirloin as their steaks—the difference in taste is phenomenal! Not only that, the burger must be at least 12 ounces, with a top quality melted cheddar cheese topping. (It also comes with caramelized onions, but I have them on the side). With fries, coleslaw and breadbasket (their own homemade), it's only $10.95. I've been there twice for the burger and twice for their prime dry-aged sirloin—the best!

Of course, the IMPROPER has already rated Abe & Louie's the Best Steakhouse, but what's wrong with dominating? Maybe next year you need a category called "Lance Armstrong of Steakhouses."

—MARTIN KESSLER

Why did you choose an out-of-state chain grocery store for your "Best Supermarket" category in the Boston's Best issue (July 21)? Whole Foods is based in Texas, which should have driven you, as a magazine trying to focus on Boston's best, to seek a local supermarket to hold that title. Did you overlook Roche Bros., located on Centre Street in West Roxbury, which boasts lower prices than Whole Foods? The quality of the produce, meat and fish is outstanding, as is the customer service and cleanliness of the store. Roche Bros. has many stores, but its banner store is in West Roxbury.

On a similar tangent, thanks for listing the banner location of Lord's and Lady's as "Boston." It, too, is in West Roxbury—a neighborhood you obviously neglected in your issue. I hope you at least save a spot for us in your next real estate issue.

—ADINA ZIDON
West Roxbury

When selecting "Boston's Best" winners, perhaps the IMPROPER should consider overall customer service as well. After all, isn't a positive and welcoming atmosphere just as important as being "the best" at what these establishments/individuals do? I've received some extremely poor and rude service at some of the places listed as the best, and without naming names, let's just say that my recommendations for department store, entertainment store, sporting goods store and up-do specialist wouldn't be the same as yours.

—SUSAN JEUNE
Boston

MR. BARTLEY'S DOES MAKE A GOOD HAMBURGER, AND I CAN'T FAULT YOUR SELECTION. BUT IN MY HUMBLE OPINION, THE BEST BURGER IN BOSTON IS AT ABE & LOUIE'S.

—MARTIN KESSLER.

CORRECTIONS

The picture accompanying the award for Most Unusual Use of the Common on page 84 of our Boston's Best issue was of the Pawsitive Dog. Like Crunch, Pawsitive Dog does offer yoga for dogs, though not on the Common.

In the July 21 Last Scene Here, Jed Raymond was incorrectly identified. He is a project manager at Raymond Real Estate, and he does not have children.

FUN, FUN, FUN

If you live by the adage that you can never have too much stuff, Funusual (which opened in Faneuil Hall last month) will make you wish you hadn't already bought so many geegaws at places like Target or Bed Bath & Beyond. Funusual sells quirky, colorful home wares, gifts and gadgets—more than 4,000 objects in total—that are far from ordinary. There are feather dusters and toothbrush holders that suction onto mirrors (both in the shapes of cartoonish animals). Steel wine and plant holders are twisted into shapes of people and animals. There's also an array of Urban Outfitters–style wares, like funkadelic lightswitch fixtures, retro lights, martini shakers, kitschy books and nifty looking clocks and ashtrays.

"Our whole concept is to offer everyday objects with a twist," says Kay Coomes, the store's enthusiastic owner. Coomes comes from England, where she used to perform as a professional magician. (She had her own TV show and performed privately for celebs including the Rolling Stones and Prince Charles.) After she came to Boston, she opened up the Magic Hat, a store in Faneuil Hall that sold gag gadgets and magic supplies.

The idea for Funusual was born when Coomes' husband suggested that she open a store with all the unusual objects she collected and kept around their house. "When I'm searching the corners of the world for these objects, I'm looking for the things that will make customers go around giggling," she says. "That's when we know we've done our job."

Funusual also carries a bit of furniture—none of which is typical. A chaise lounge transforms into a chair with an ottoman; one table's top is a clockface; other tables' bases light up like lava lamps. Keep your eye out for more Funusuals—Coomes hopes to open one store a year. 8 North Market, Faneuil Hall Marketplace (617-439-8840). Mon.–Sat., 10 am–9 pm; Sun., 11 am–6 pm. —E.H.

WE'LL TRY ANYTHING...

Everyone knows about the Curse of the Bambino, but another, more obscure Red Sox superstition is being resurrected this year: the tradition of Tessie. Back when Boston used to win the World Series on a regular basis (both the Sox and the Boston Braves), a fan club called the Royal Rooters traveled to the games and sang a ditty called "Tessie" meant to annoy and psyche out the opposing teams. When the Rooters sang "Tessie," Boston teams were 20-4 in postseason play. Sans the song, they were 2-4. With an eye toward reviving the "Tessie" advantage, the Dropkick Murphys recently recorded an updated version of the tune, and they performed it live before the Sox' July 24 game against the Yankees—which the Sox won in the bottom of the ninth on a Bill Mueller home run. Coincidence...or something more? —Ezra Dyer inner view

ALMOST FAMOUS—TOM DICESARE

Could've sworn you saw John Kerry walking around MIT sans Secret Service stiffs? Chances are you were gawking at Tom DiCesare, a local Kerry look-alike. The scientific illustrator for MIT's Whitehead Institute has parlayed his uncanny resemblance to Boston's most famous Beacon Hiller into a part-time impersonator's gig. Since April, his card's been filling up with stints including Today, Crossfire, Live with Regis and Kelly and a gig leading "Voter-obics" at the Boston Sports Club. We caught up with Dicesare to find out what it's like to (kind of) walk in Kerry's shoes.

IB: When did you realize your looks were a marketable asset?

TD: I contacted Brent Mendenhall, who is a Bush look-alike, and sent him a picture of Kerry and myself side by side. He had a commercial he was going to shoot in L.A, and they didn't have a Kerry. So I sent them my picture and they flew me out there, and that was it.

IB: How often do people mistake you for Kerry in Boston?

TD: Well, I don't have gray hair, and I'm younger than he is, but people will stop and think about it.

IB: People tell other people they look like such and such a celebrity all the time. What made you actually become an impersonator?

TD: People have been saying, "You oughta do something with it" for years. But when I contacted the Bush look-alike, that's when things started to happen.

IB: Have you met John Kerry?

TD: I saw him twice. I used to be a photographer for the [Wayland] Town Crier, and I went to a function and he was there. That was back in '89, but we didn't look quite as similar then. And I saw him at the Boston Marathon in 2002. People say I should meet him.

IB: Would you ever consider being on MTV's I Want a Famous Face to further authenticate your look?

TD: I've been doing so much stuff [during the DNC] to authenticate my look, like listening to MP3 sound clips and speeches and videos downloaded from his Web site, watching him and following his movements, and also looking at what traits other impersonators and cartoonists are picking up. I'm a cartoonist too, so I tend to pick up small things and be able to exaggerate them. But I wouldn't consider doing something like [I Want a Famous Face].

IB: Is it tempting to pass yourself off as the real deal to unassuming people on the street?

TD: I've been doing a lot of that for TV stations and networks [during the DNC]. I did a little walk around for Today and MSNBC, but I wouldn't do it on my own.

IB: Do you ever get heckled with anti-Kerry sentiments when you're not in character?

TD: I have a couple times while in character, but I think it's all in good humor.

IB: How much can you expect to pocket per appearance if Kerry wins?

TD: Depending on the amount of speaking, etc., anywhere from $1,000 to $5,000.

IB: What's the most sought-after gig for impersonators?

TD: I was talking to The Tonight Show. I have to send them something, but I actually had a Japanese film crew follow me around, and the Bush look-alike actually did a bunch of Japanese commercials, where they flew him out there. I think that's been and would be the most fun.

IB: What's your favorite Kerry parody or line you use?

TD: I think "My Vietnam service sets me apart. While I was fighting in 'Nam, my opponent was at Cheers drinking with Nahm." And my closing line: "In closing, I have a message for George Dubya. Watch out. Here comes John Effya."

IB: What are your plans if Kerry wins?

TD: To stay here, working at the Whitehead Institute and use my vacation time to choose jobs that I would want, and do as much of it as possible.

IB: If he loses?

TD: I'll stay here at the Whitehead Institute and use my vacation time for vacation.

GOOFY FOR GUAC

Welcome to Qdoba Country... In late April, Qdoba Mexican Grill, a Colorado-based chain, hit it big after debuting in the Prudential Center food court—the first of 20 planned Bay State locations. In July, store number two opened in the Financial District and proved that Qdoba's success in the Pru was no fluke—lines extended well onto the street. Next stop in Qdoba's quest to conquer the city? A site at Northeastern University set to open by the end of the summer. 62 Summer St., Boston (617-859-9233). www.qdoba.com.

Goodbye, for Now... After 12 years of service, Il Panino, Frank de Pasquale's five-level Italian restaurant and Financial District nightlife hot spot, shut its doors on Aug. 1. But don't worry, it won't be gone for long. "Frank and the Il Panino patrons were just getting a little bored," spokeswoman Chris Lyons says. "They are only going to be closed until about October and will then re-open with a brand new concept." They're keeping the new theme a secret, but with two full months until the re-opening, we're expecting big things. In the meantime, you can still get your fix at the North End's Il Panino Express (264–266 Hanover Street), which remains open. www.ilpanino.com.

Go West, Young Man... Restaurateurs Joe Green and Michael Conlon, who already have a stake in a foursome of formidable local eateries (the Paramount, the Blarney Stone, the 21st Amendment and Peking Tom's), added a fifth, with the opening of West on Centre in West Roxbury this summer. The former site of Buck Mulligan's pub has been transformed into an 80-seat eatery with two plasma TVs and a diverse menu that covers everything from baked mac and cheese to roasted swordfish. 1732 Centre St., West Roxbury (617-323-4199). —J.I. and R.L.

NATURAL BEAUTY

Remedix, which opened in June, is more than just a store filled with beauty products. It has everything from facial cleansers to body washes, along with things you never knew you needed, like tooth polish and dry shampoo. But the best thing about Remedix is that almost all the products are natural and handmade. Owner Claudia Starkey grew up in Eastern Europe, where from an early age she made all her own beauty products. She's perfected her science and is now a master at formulating. Though it's been open only a month, Remedix already has a significant following. Prices range from around $9 to $30. 279 Newbury St. Boston (617-437-1155). www.remedix.com. —Samantha House

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Northern Exposure... Shopping the North Face's spankin' new Newbury Street store will leave even the slickest of city slickers pining for that Outward Bound expedition they never took. The 4,500-square-foot wilderness emporium, which opened in Quiksilver's old space in late July, is stocked with hiking, climbing and general man-against-the-elements gear. According to the staff of certified outdoorsmen and -women, NASA-quality research and technology is behind all the merchandise. So you can rest assured that your $500 parka won't leave you high and dry (or frostbitten for that matter) when you scale K2. And in the rare case that something does go wrong with your North Face gear, they'll fix or replace it free of charge—everything is guaranteed for life. 326 Newbury St., Boston (617-536-8060).

In the Bag... Fashion plates are forever in pursuit of the hottest new purses. Sadly, despite the fact that the handbag industry has spawned its own language (totes, clutches, carryalls, weekenders), lots of ladies succumb to the yawn-worthy likes of Burberry, Coach and LV logo bags. Sarah Johnson, Newbury's newest bag lady, is poised to overthrow this stale style sense with her bag/accessories shop, Luna. Open since May, Luna stocks high-end labels like Kooba, Buzz by Jane Fox and Lorelei. "They're more emerging and harder-to-find designers," says Johnson. "I chose labels that are really stylish but aren't the Louis Vuitton or Kate Spade that you see on everybody's arm." 286 Newbury St., Boston (617-262-3900). www.lunaboston.com.

Luna bag

Pimp My Cab... Starting last month, the TVinMOTION company began outfitting more than 100 Boston taxis with flatscreen TVs mounted in the partition wall. The TV begins running a video loop when a fare is picked up, and passengers are treated to some original programming and clips from A&E Biography. But mostly, the rider is subjected to ads, and TVinMOTION's raison d'etre, according to their literature, is to "influence target audiences in a comfortable and captive environment." If, as we suspect, people generally don't like being held captive and forced to watch ads, the taxi TV trend could start another, as yet unheard-of movement: calling shotgun in cabs.

Super-Skinny Me... With lawsuits still popping up and the damning documentary Super Size Me playing in movie theaters around the country, McDonald's is certainly feeling the heat. So it's not surprising that Micky D's is trying to generate some positive press with its new "balanced lifestyle initiative." At 10:20 am (registration starts at 9) on Aug. 18, Bob Greene, Oprah Winfrey's personal trainer, leads a McDonald's-sponsored walk through Boston Common. Walkers can watch fitness demonstrations along the way and can also get a signed copy of Greene's book. Just think, if he got Oprah in shape (kinda), imagine how many Quarter Pounders he can inspire you to work off (617-573-0076, ext. 7777).

Within Reach... The prospect of an Ikea has been dangling in front of Bostonians for years now, and our appetite for inexpensive furniture won't be satiated until next summer, when a store will at last open in Stoughton. There is some good news, though. Devotees of the Swedish furniture chain can take a quick trip to New Haven, Conn., where Ikea opened its latest megastore July 28. In addition to 311,000 square feet filled with more than 9,000 furnishings and 50 room settings, the New Haven location has more than 1,200 parking spaces. And while it's not exactly in the neighborhood, our next best option is Elizabeth, N.J. So until next summer, a two-and-a-half-hour drive doesn't seem so bad. 450 Sargent Drive., New Haven, Conn. (203-865-4532). www.ikea.com. —E.H., J.I. and R.L.

CALL OF THE WILD

Find shelter and lock your doors because girls are going wild out there.

I don't know if you're aware of this, but girls are going wild everywhere. It's become something of an epidemic. Go to any of the world's hot spots, and you'll likely witness the ravaging effects of the GGW scourge, as real girls go out of control. Symptoms include a Tourette's-like compulsion to expose one's breasts, pull up one's skirt, and, in severe cases, make out with other girls who are themselves going wild. Boston should be especially concerned about the spread of GGW due to the large student population, as college girls are especially prone to doing things they never taught you in school. Fortunately, cultural anthropologists of the future will be able to study this phenomenon thanks to the diligent documentary work of the Girls Gone Wild company, which travels around the country in a big bus making sure that every bit of wild behavior is carefully recorded by digital video camera.

Until recently, I'd only ever witnessed girls going wild once or twice, the most notable time being a spring break trip to the Bahamas my senior year in college. Just when I thought it was safe to go to the beach, there they were. I alerted a lifeguard that girls were going wild, but he told me there was nothing he could do—the sound of whistles only drives them wilder. For a guy like me, who considers the green Tabasco sauce quite hot enough, thanks, it was a horrifying week, I assure you.

But ignoring a problem won't make it go away, so I decided to see for myself how far GGW has spread when the famous documentary crew visited Avalon in July. To try to help my friends recognize and understand the GGW symptoms, I also brought along my friend Wilson and 30 or so other males on the Mighty Bustonian—our own research vessel, if you will. Wilson was a great sport. Despite it being his bachelor party that night, he was willing to devote several hours of the evening to science. All the other guys were surprisingly enthusiastic as well—yet another confirmation of the wisdom of Aristotle, who said, "All men by nature desire knowledge."

Early in the night, we stopped the bus at Blanchard's to buy roughly 300 beers, to help us cope with the anguish of encountering girls afflicted with such a debilitating neurological condition. As we were waiting for several of our shoppers to come out of the store, two girls on Rollerblades skated past. Predictably, someone yelled at them to stop skating, change up and get on the bus. Unpredictably, they actually did so.

Let's call our friends Paris and Nicole. They looked mild-mannered enough, but, I wondered, why would two girls get on a bus with 30 guys, especially a bus that's equipped with a stripper pole? Might they be wild? I was anxious to find out.

For a while Paris hung out and chatted with the chuds, but as night fell, a change came over her. Soon she was gyrating around the pole and removing her clothing as our group of amateur researchers eagerly snapped pictures. Imagine! A specimen going wild right in our midst! I wondered what triggered the attack. Was it the flashing neon lights of the Bustonian, the shiny gold stripper pole, or the subject's consumption of three Bud Lights? I wished I could isolate the variables and find out. From the looks on the other males' faces, it seemed that they, too, were thinking about isolating some variables. Nicole, for her part, danced a bit but mostly just watched. She'd probably seen Paris turn into a weregirl before.

> I ALERTED A LIFEGUARD THAT GIRLS WERE GOING WILD, BUT HE TOLD ME THERE WAS NOTHING HE COULD DO—THE SOUND OF WHISTLES ONLY DRIVES THEM WILDER

Eventually, we arrived at Avalon and proceeded inside en masse. Paris, no shrinking violet, was onstage in roughly 2 seconds. But she didn't flash her boobs. Neither did any of the other girls. A couple of them may have made out with one another, but if that really did it for me I'd watch the Britney and Madonna video clip on my computer 300 more times.

Overall, the Girls Gone Wild party was kind of anticlimactic after the spontaneous scene on the bus. Which makes sense. Girls who go wild according to schedule are called strippers. Real girls can no more go wild on command than Tom Siragusa can touch his toes. Of course, I could've missed something while I was buying drinks. I'll have to order the tape to be sure.

DAMIEN FAHEY

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

MTV it-boy Damien Fahey, host of the network's wildly popular Total Request Live and its hot new show Video Clash, was born and raised in Longmeadow and went to Longmeadow High School. Even as a child, he was obsessed with music; according to his parents, before he could even walk, Damien climbed onto a stereo to turn up the volume on a Rolling Stones song. At age 12, he spent his savings on recording gear and outfitted his bedroom as an ersatz radio studio. At 14, he assembled lists of radio and TV stations and asked his parents to take him to visit. His first job was at WMAS-FM in West Springfield, where he took an internship that grew into on-air gigs, including co-hosting the nationally syndicated Neil's On Wheels Car Care Show while he was still in high school. While preparing to study communications at Northeastern, he was invited to join the staff at KISS 108. Juggling studies with a job as a weekend DJ, he earned his degree in three years. By February 2002, he'd been hired by MTV as Beach House correspondent for TRL's Shore Thing remotes, and since then, his profile has continued to grow. Today, he is both a writer and the host of TRL. He lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: Lots of nookie goin' on at the MTV Beach House?

Damien Fahey: Ummmmm, for some people. A lot of other people are enjoying it, but for me, not so much.

JS: So "they're singing songs of love, but not for you." How sad. In high school, were you the A/V geek?

DF: Yeah, to an extent. My first three years I was just really focused on radio, so I was completely antisocial. Then I realized that I wasted about two years of my life wiring electronics in my room, and looking around, I was like, "Whoa! Girls have boobies!" So I kinda went through puberty and wanted to be cool.

JS: At that point, you were producing Neil's On Wheels Car Care Show? How did that compare with Car Talk*?*

DF: Basically, the same kinda deal. It was me and this guy Neil, an auto mechanic and a really bright guy who knew everything about cars. I was there just to add my two cents. Most of the tapes are really embarrassing. They should be buried in the backyard somewhere.

JS: So were you Click or Clack?

DF: I was more like Clunk.

JS: First thing that popped into your head when MTV hired you?

DF: I thought I'd won some sort of contest. I was like, "Am I the ninth caller?"

I REALIZED I WANTED TO BE A YOUNGER CARSON DALY, BUT IT WAS JUST A LAP DANCE AND A DREAM. NOW IT'S COME TRUE, WHICH IS PRETTY AMAZING.

JS: Was it a big adjustment becoming an it-boy?

DF: Well, I started out in radio, and then realized I wanted to be a younger Carson Daly, but it was just a lap dance and a dream. Now it's come true, which is pretty amazing.

JS: So are you insinuating that Carson's old?

DF: Yeah. He's up there.

JS: First album you ever bought?

DF: Tears for Fears' Songs from the Big Chair. It's still one of my favorites, too, but I remember buying it and feeling really ashamed about it. I don't know why.

JS: Favorite band of all time?

DF: The Police.

JS: What do you listen to away from work?

DF: Oh, geez. Everything. It depends on where I am. I like my music to suit the occasion. Like at the beach, I always listen to Bob Marley. If I'm driving around, I'll put on Velvet Revolver. If I'm just hangin' out, the Dave Matthews Band.

JS: So what's the seduction soundtrack?

DF: What gets me is Neil Sedaka. Just kidding. I think it's trite to try and seduce a woman with music. So what I did was I bought this six-dollar DVD called "The Fireplace." It's video of a log burning, and when I put that baby on, the ladies just melt like putty in my hands.

JS: [Laughs.] Smartass. Pop song you're most sick of?

DF: Great question. I really shouldn't say this, because I really like her, but that Beyonce song, "Naughty Girl." I can't take it. I also can't take the Sean Paul "Get Busy" song anymore.

JS: Doesn't that suck, when an otherwise OK song hits the saturation point and you never want to hear it again? I'm like that with Outkast.

DF: I know. I can recognize it in one-tenth of a second.

JS: Any appearances in magazines like Tiger Beat, Teen Beat, YM, Sassy*?*

DF: I've done photo shoots for them.

JS: So how does it feel knowing teenage girls and boys have you pinned up on their walls and are probably masturbating looking at you?

DF: I just hope they don't get a rash. [Laughs.]

JS: Best free stuff you get?

DF: CDs. Concert tickets. As far as swag, the Punk'd Jelly Tote I'm very proud of. The other day, we were at the beach house and New Found Glory came on. They all had the same sunglasses, and they were really cool, so I asked where they got them. They told me, and I told the lady in wardrobe, and she comes back and says, "They're on the way. They're driving a pair up from the factory." I was like, "Is this for real?" So free clothes, glasses, music. Everything is free.

JS: It's good to be Damien Fahey. Biggest pop star crush?

DF: Nelly Furtado.

JS: Biggest prima donna bitch or asshole?

DF: Let's see. Who's dead, so I can't get in trouble? There've been a few.

JS: OK, no names. Just give me an example of difficult behavior.

DF: Oh, the guy who gave one-word answers during an interview, then walked offstage, threw his microphone on the floor and said, "I'm outta here." Then there was another guy who's famous for enjoying the Playboy mansion, who was standing right next to me when he said, "Boy, this show was so much better when Carson was on it."

JS: Bikini mud-wrestling match you'd most like to see: Beyonce vs. Jessica Simpson, Shakira vs. Christina Aguilera, or Avril Levine vs. Alicia Keys?

DF: I think we've all already seen Christina Aguilera mud-wrestle in a bikini in one of her videos, and God bless her for that. I'd have to say Avril Lavigne vs. Alicia Keys. She's very sexy.

JS: Ever watch 106 & Park on BET?

DF: Sure.

JS: Don't you think Free should just bitch-slap A.J.?

DF: I'm betting she probably has.

JS: OK, let's go back to your KISS 108 days. Tell me a dirty secret about Matt Siegel.

DF: He's very particular about the studio temperature, and if it's off by even half a degree, there are e-mails that get sent out. He's one of those guys who are just naturals on the radio.

JS: Not that you're not qualified to do what you do, but would you be on MTV if it weren't for your looks?

DF: Aaaah, I'm pretty sure you have to be good-looking to be on television.

JS: Refreshingly honest. So does 50 Cent need anger management classes?

DF: Nah. You know, he comes to do the show, and he's crocheting in the dressing room, he's got Enya on. He actually taught me water aerobics, which I thought was nice. So we'll put on our little rubber caps and dive into the pool…

JS: [Laughs.] Other end of the spectrum: Justin Timberlake. He needs a spanking, doesn't he?

DF: I suppose it depends on who you are and why you want to spank him. I really wanted not to like him. I had disdain for the boy bands. Then you meet him, and he's super cool and maybe the nicest guy you'll ever meet.

JS: Last question. Your press kit says that you are "at the vortex of youth culture"…

DF: Well, I'm not sure it's the vortex. The naked cowboy is about 100 feet away from me…

JS: What happens when you become too old to date Cameron Diaz or Demi Moore?

DF: I'm gonna keep going with the botox injections and the plastic surgery. Seriously, I feel that. I just turned 24 and I'm already starting to have little lines in my face. IB

THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

SAY IT AIN'T SO, JOE

If you thought the Bruins were a letdown last season, imagine them without Joe Thornton.

Word has it that Joe Thornton wants out of Boston—specifically, out of the Boston Bruins uniform. Thornton is on record as saying that's not entirely true. That he's not happy with the way the playoffs ended and his treatment by the Bruins organization, but there is some fence-mending ahead. But let's be honest: Could anybody blame Thornton for wanting out?

Look at what just happened at the FleetCenter. The place rocked. True, the Democratic National Convention was basically a giant infomercial for our own John Kerry, but it was awesome seeing the home court so electrified. The irony here is that it might be a long time before it feels like that again on Causeway Street, particularly if the ice surface remains down. Assuming a lockout doesn't freeze out fans altogether, the Bruins faithful could be tested in another way.

Thornton really represents Boston Bruins fans everywhere. Everyone has had enough mediocrity, enough bickering, enough contract squabbles and enough blaming of everyone but the janitors for the Bs' troubles over the last decade. The problem begins and ends at general manager Mike O'Connell's desk, and making good with Thornton should be his top priority.

People have to understand there's a history here. The problems stem back to Thornton's rookie year. After the Bruins made him first the overall draft pick, then-coach Pat Burns' plan was to bring Thornton along slowly. It wasn't easy watching the 18-year-old man-child plod along with six goals that year, but it was part of a plan.

At the completion of his rookie year, O'Connell flew to Thornton's family home in Canada and the pair spoke. But instead of talking about the difficulty of transitioning into the NHL, O'Connell apparently focused on Thornton's hair length. He told the Bruins captain in not so many words that if he cut his hair, his game would improve. Short hair equals 40 goals? Thornton was insulted. Since the grooming speech, their relationship has never been great. But hair length isn't Thornton's only issue with his GM. Apparently Thornton has questioned O'Connell's "lukewarm" commitment to winning. One by one, Thornton watched his friends, from Jason Allison to Billy Guerin, some of the best players in black-and-gold, flee. And now it appears his right-hand man in the slot, Glen Murray, a 40-goal scorer, is out too.

If you were a superstar, among the top five players in your sport, would you want to remain somewhere (and Thornton love Boston) if there is no star-quality talent o your flanks?

This past season looked different Thornton finally felt like he had a tean that was good enough to compete for th Stanley Cup. Well, it never happened And a source close to the team says no body took the upset loss to the Canadien harder than Thornton. The fact that he la bored through the playoffs with torn carti lage in his rib cage (ask anybody who's ha that injury how painful it is) in an effort t help the team added physical pain t Thornton's mental anguish.

The real aches, though, set in a few day later, when O'Connell went public o Thornton's alleged role in the collaps against Montreal. O'Connell knew hov hurt Thornton was, that he probabl shouldn't have played at all, but it didn' matter. The Bruins management needed scapegoat and Thornton was it.

THORNTON HAS REPORTEDLY QUESTIONED BRUINS GM MIKE O'CONNELL'S COMMITMENT TO WINNING.

While Thornton's rib cage has healed the sting of O'Connell's words still linger And it doesn't look like the situation wi be improving anytime soon. A source tol me definitively that Big Joe has though about offering up an ultimatum to owne Jeremy Jacobs: Me or OC. Take your pick

While O'Connell is coming off probab his best "regular" season in his job, acqui ing Sergei Gonchar and Michael Nyland for the stretch run, in the end, again, wasn't enough. A good effort doesn't ne essarily result in a Stanley Cup.

Thornton recently signed with a profe sional team in the Switzerland league so h can play hockey if there is a work stoppag But there was a message in that signin which the Bruins didn't appreciate.

He's not happy in Boston because of o guy. And I can't say I blame him. IB

A FIELD GUIDE TO BOSTON'S BARFLIES AND LOUNGE LIZARDS

BY EZRA DYER AND JESSICA IREDALE
ILLUSTRATIONS BY DEREK AYLWARD

It's not politically correct to make generalizations about broad groups of people, but let's face it: A lot of the characters in this city fit into particular categories. When you see a guy sitting at a table at a Cambridge Starbucks wearing thick-rimmed glasses and silently networking his cell phone with his Bluetooth-enabled Powerbook G4, you don't think "I wonder if he reads Maxim and hangs out at the Beacon Hill Pub?" No. You're looking at a specimen of the Cambridge Intellectual in his native habitat. If you wanted to see more Cambridge Intellectuals, you wouldn't go to Aria, and if you were looking for a Prepster, you wouldn't visit the Milky Way. That's just the way it is. With an eye toward helping you better understand some of the creatures of the Boston night, we've put together this handy rundown of the major types and their defining traits. Maybe you fit into one of the categories, or possibly several of them. Or maybe you're just too cool for classification.

creative

FEMALE

Name: Zoe, Phoebe, Chloe, Joey
Occupation: Graphic designer, art director, gallery director, photojournalist, advertising, copywriter, successful freelance artist
Age: 23–40
Typical evening wear: Chunky jewelry from travel abroad, funky vintage skirt, slim-fitting shirt, pointy-toed flats, large handbag—all put together with a deft sense of color and texture that eludes the average gal.
Transportation: T or bike. If she owns a car it's a 10-year-old foreign model, like an inherited Saab or BMW.
Residence: South End condo or loft; Somerville
Drinks: Mojito; vodka, ordered by brand
Music/radio station: WERS, Iron and Wine, the Polyphonic Spree
Looking for: A long-term relationship, but not necessarily marriage
Impressed by: A great portfolio (art is preferred, but if stock, it's not discussed), travel and appreciation of other cultures
Favorite bars: Pho Republique, the Milky Way
Favorite restaurants: Cuchi Cuchi, Delux Cafe
Reading material: Literary journals like Ploughshares and Tin House; The New Yorker; Self; Meditations from the Mat: Daily Reflections on the Path of Yoga
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Biking, travel, yoga, going to museums and galleries
In 10 years, she'll be: Living comfortably in a converted loft with her SO, working on a documentary about Hillary Clinton's campaign for the presidency
Line-cutting strategy: Doesn't go to places that have lines.
Pick-up line: "Join me for a tofu scramble?"
After-hours destination: Home for some QT with her cat
Most compatible with: The type O of the nightlife personalities, the female Creative type is the universal donor: compatible with virtually everyone, as long as they're genuine and interested.
Least compatible with: Anyone who, underneath it all, is just a poseur (e.g., the mainstreamer who suddenly shows up at the All Asia Bar with a faux-hawk and his pinky nail painted black)

MALE

Name: Drew, Leo, Braxton, Isaac
Occupation: Works in publishing, graphic design, the music or film industry, advertising
Age: 23–40
Typical evening wear: Jeans, funky leather sneakers, baggy T-shirt
Transportation: Low-rider bicycle for short trips, 1974 BMW 2002tii for longer ones
Residence: Jamaica Plain, Southie
Drinks: Miller High Life, tequila
Favorite music: Underground mix tapes, Thievery Corporation, old Fatboy Slim from before everyone knew about Fatboy Slim
Looking for: A girl who reads a lot and gets a lot of questions right when watching Jeopardy, but also looks good in low-rider jeans.
Impressed by: Signed, framed photo of Hemingway, titanium Apple PowerBook, a good vocabulary
Favorite bars: Bukowski's (for the mac and cheese, not the atmosphere), Sophia's (because he's considering learning how to salsa dance)
Favorite restaurants: Pho Republique, the Barking Crab, Zaftigs, Flux
Reading material: David Sedaris, Wired, The New Yorker, Salon.com
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Drinking (but not in a bar), playing petanque, mountain biking
In 10 years, he'll be: Rich and famous or a waiter in a ski town in Colorado
Line-cutting strategy: Pleads with bouncer, to no avail
Pick-up line: Does not speak unless spoken to.
After-hours destination: The closest pizza place that's still open. He's got the munchies.
Most compatible with: Creative female
Least compatible with: Fashion Sla

FEMALE

Name: Catherine, Liz, Paige, Mandy
Occupation: Public relations, accountant, investment banker, nanny

Music/radio station: Dave Matthews, Ben Harper, Dispatch
Looking for: A three-carat diamond ring (or a hockey player)
Impressed by: Good job, good genes
Favorite bars: Boston Sail Loft, Beacon Hill Pub, Harvard Gardens, Houston's
Favorite restaurants: Fugakyu, Stephanie's on Newbury
Reading material: Vogue, Bergdorf Blondes, Us Weekly, J. Crew catalog
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Shopping, working out
In 10 years, she'll be: Married with 1.5 kids.
Line-cutting strategy: Prettiest friend flirts the group's way in.
Pick-up line: N/A, but if she's not wearing a rock, she's available.
After-hours destination: Home with a cute preppy boy or VamPire for a PG make out.
Most compatible with: Prepster guy, VamPire Least compatible with: Hipster/ Alternative, Creative

prepster

MALE

Name: Tucker, Zack, Chad, Trip
Occupation: Politician-in-the-making, venture capitalist, commercial real estate, investment banking
Age: 23–29
Typical evening wear: Lacoste polo, collar up; seersucker or madras shorts, or Nantucket Reds; belt with whales or sail boats on it; topsiders or loafers
Transportation: Graduates from Jeep Cherokee Sport to a Land Rover or Chevy Tahoe
Residence: Back Bay, Beacon Hill or North End bachelor pad, with large flat-screen TV, PlayStation 2, DVD player, stereo system and full bar
Drinks: Goose, rocks, lime; Heineken
Music/radio station: Musical taste was cultivated in prep school, so: Phish, Toots and the Maytals, Phil Collins.
Looking for: A one-night-stand with a really hot chick; long-term relationship with a girl with plenty of Lilly Pulitzer in her closet and trophy-wife potential
Impressed by: Money, golf handicap
Favorite bars: Boston Sail Loft, Beacon Hill Pub, Harvard Gardens, Houston's
Favorite restaurants: Capital Grille, or his family's clubhouse in the burbs
Reading material: Golf Digest, Playboy, American Psycho, The Catcher in the Rye, The Great Gatsby, Bringing Down the House
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Golf, sailing, tennis
In 10 years, he'll be: Making a killing at his family business and rendering his trophy wife a golf widow six months out of the year.
Line-cutting strategy: Green handshake, or the bouncer was formerly a caddy at his club.
Pick-up line: "My yacht sleeps 10."
After-hours destination: His apartment for a late-night beer pong tourney
Most compatible with: Prepster girl; possibly Mainstream Molly if she's extra hot or he's extra drunk
Least compatible with: Hipster/ Alternative (his upturned collar triggers her gag reflex)

VP (aka VamPire)

MALE

Names: Bill, Ted or any name followed by Jr. or III
Occupation: Stockbroker, consultant, business owner
Age: 35–50
Typical evening wear: Jeans with loafers, fun shirt that looks like it should be worn by someone a little younger and unbuttoned a little less.

Line-cutting strategy: Bribe
Pick-up line: "Can I buy you absolutely anything you want?"
After-hours destination: Chinatown (not always for food)
Most compatible with: Mainstream Molly (much younger) Least compatible with: Female VamPire

FEMALE

Name: Carol, Janice, Donna, Beth
Occupation: VP of something or other, executive director of stuff
Age: 35–50
Typical evening wear: Short pinstriped skirt, blouse showing some cleavage, heels, gold jewelry
Transportation: BMW 5 series, Executive Coach
Residence: Weston, Back Bay
Drinks: Flirtini, Fuzzy Navel
Favorite music: Fleetwood Mac
Looking for: A man who's mature, successful and ready for a committed, long-term relationship. Or a cabana boy.
Impressed by: Ruthlessness, foreign-language skills
Favorite bars: Bristol Lounge, the Federalist, Excelsior, Via Matta
Favorite restaurants: Great Bay, Mama Maria's, Radius
Reading material: Harlequin romance novels (privately), The Economist (in public)
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Working out, going to St. Bart's with the girls
In 10 years, she'll be: Raising an adopted Chinese baby and making artisanal cheeses on a farm in Vermont.
Line-cutting strategy: If there's a line, doesn't bother—finds a place with no damn line.
Pick-up line: "Send me your resume."
After-hours destination: The hotel room of the mysterious Ronaldo she met at 1:45 am
Most compatible with: Prepster under the age of 25 Least compatible with: Cambridge Intellectual hipster/ alternative

FEMALE

Names: Liza, Gwen, Viv, Nikki, Keiko
Occupation: Barista, life coach, photographer, singer/songwriter
Age: 23–30
Typical evening wear: Cuffed jeans, tight T-shirt, Fluevogs or cowboy boots, spiked belt

Residence: Jamaica Plain, Allston/Brighton, Mission Hill
Drinks: Bourbon, PBR
Music/radio station: WMBR, the Yeah Yeah Yeahs, Elefant, Desperate Bicycles
Looking for: A rad guy who refuses to give in to the man and dresses like Wes Anderson
Impressed by: A rare European import of her favorite band's new album; knowing how to silkscreen
Favorite bars: The Milky Way, the Enormous Room, Zuzu, the Model Café
Favorite restaurants: B-Side Lounge, Someday Café, Diesel Café
Reading material: Vice Magazine, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Adbusters
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Writing haiku, thrifting, learning
In 10 years, she'll be: Finding creative ways to cover up her tattoos, and going to law school.
Line-cutting strategy: Claims to know a band member
Pick-up line: N/A. Her stoic/too-cool look is as unbreachable as the guards at Buckingham Palace. Use your best judgment.
After-hours destination: Back to a friend's house to watch guys play Halo on Xbox, or home to listen to Elliott Smith and cry
Most compatible with: Hipster/ Alternative or Cambridge Intellectual Least compatible with: Everyone else

MALE

Name: TJ, CJ, RJ, Zeke
Occupation: Courier, musician, waiter; graphic designer or computer programmer if he's a 9-to-5-er
Age: 23–30
Typical evening wear: Baggy jeans or worn-out corduroys; long-sleeve, button-down shirt over short-sleeve T-shirt with an ironic saying across the front; spiked belt; Chuck Taylors
Transportation: One-speed track bike, skateboard, T
Residence: Jamaica Plain, Allston/Brighton, Somerville
Drinks: Schlitz, PBR
Music/radio station: WERS, Godspeed You Black Emperor!, Mogwai, My Morning Jacket, Fugazi
Looking for: A cool punky girlfriend
Impressed by: Finding rare vinyl records, the perfect used T-shirt, knowledge of comic books
Favorite bars: Bukowski's, the Other Side Cosmic Café
Favorite restaurants: El Pelon Taqueria, Grasshopper
Reading material: Chuck Klosterman, Pitchfork.com, Kafka, Milan Kundera, The Onion
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Amateur DJing, rehearsing with his band, going thrifting
In 10 years, he'll be: Finally finishing his degree, and most likely giving in to the man
Line-cutting strategy: His buddy, the bus boy/line cook, lets him in the back door.
Pick-up line: "Want to help defeat George Bush?"
After-hours destination: Going to a friend's place to play Halo on Xbox
Most compatible with: Hipster/Alternative female, natch
Least compatible with: Mainstream Molly (being mainstream is, like, so lame)

Transportation: 2005 BMW M3, Porsche Cayenne
Residence: Back Bay or South End loft
Drinks: Grey Goose, Tanqueray mixed drinks. Frequently bemoans lack of bottle service in Boston.
Favorite music: Any compilation with the word "Ibiza" in the title; anything that's been remixed at least three times
Looking for: A supermodel
Impressed by: Labels, VIP friends, pedigree
Favorite bars: Aria, Avalon, Embassy
Favorite restaurants: Mistral, Armani Café, Mantra
Reading material: Menus at the above restaurants
Non-bar-related recreational activities: Smoking, flying to Monaco for the weekend, pitting Mercedes dealers against one another to knock $500 off the price of that S600
In 10 years, he'll be: Living abroad.
Line-cutting strategy: Making eye contact with the bouncer, shaking hands and walking right in Pick-up line: "Is that from the fall collection?"
After-hours destination: Rise, News
Most compatible with: Fashion Slave
Least compatible with: Hipster/Alternative

Mel Stiller (right) leads a sing-along at Jacob Wirth.

Ready for a break from your tried-and-true nightlife routine? Check this stuff out.

BY JUDITH FORMAN PHOTOGRAPHS BY OLIVIA GATTI

Going out? You know the drill: Start with after-work drinks at the pub near the office. Then, meet up with friends in the Back Bay for expensive martinis and cheap pickup lines. Some nights, especially if you have a date, you'll do dinner, maybe a movie.

Let's face it—everyone has a few favorite bars or clubs, and it's easy to fall into a comfortable nightlife routine. But sometimes, you just want to shake things up. Lucky for you, there are plenty of other diversions in Boston—you just have to know where to look.

From dancing with drag queens to sampling sauvignon blanc, read on to see what the city has to offer.

SINGIN' ALONG

If you pull up a chair near Mel Stiller's piano, you'd bette be ready to sing.

For the past 15 years, Stiller has been the main attrac tion Friday nights at Jacob Wirth Restaurant, which has been dishing out European eats and steins of beer since 1868. From 8 pm until midnight, he commands the piano for a giant sing-along.

Don't worry if you don't know the words—Stiller passes out songbooks with the lyrics to more than 500 tunes. Most are rock and pop songs from the 1950s, '60s and '70s. Classics range from "Hey Jude" to "Leaving on a Jet Plane" to "Margaritaville."

"A lot of people really enjoy singing," says Stiller. Be cause it's a group effort, unlike karaoke, he says, people fee more free. "It's a very friendly, festive, happy atmosphere."

To general manager Jonny Blass, the piano bar is the ultimate in unpretentious entertainment.

"You don't need to worry about what you're wearing," says Blass, a native of Scotland, where piano bars are popular. "You can shout and scream and no one will tell you to keep quiet."

If show tunes are more your speed, head a bit deeper into the Theater District to Encore Lounge, located in the Tremont Boston Hotel. Some time after 9 pm most nights, a pianist takes the stage for a cabaret-style show that often features solo singers from the audience. The lights are low, and votive candles and red neon give the room a warm glow.

There are no songbooks here, says Carol O'Shaughnessy, who performs on Saturday nights. "People have to know their music when they walk in the door."

WAIT, WAIT, DON'T TELL US...

Although they're in Allston, most of the people at the Common Ground bar on Monday nights have Springfield on their mind. Starting at 7, hardcore fans of Homer and company gather for a trivia competition based entirely on The Simpsons.

"People like to show off their super-niche trivia," say Erin Scott of Brighton, who's run the weekly event for about three years. "The questions that I ask are really, really difficult, and nine times out of 10, someone knows the answer."

Scott asks three rounds of nine questions. To answer, contestants hold up paddles with laminated headshots of the show's characters. At the end of the night, the top three contenders enter a speed round to vie for Simpsons toys and comic books. (Scott, who manages the New England Comics store in Allston, provides the prizes.) In between rounds, the bar shows an episode of the cartoon series.

Kristine Barker is a regular and a frequent winner. The 29-year-old Brighton resident usually comes with friends but doesn't feel shy about going solo. "It's not like any other cheesy bar event," she says. "You can just come and sit alone. Most bars, you can't do that and feel comfortable."

A few blocks down Harvard Avenue, in Brookline, the crowd is louder and the trivia questions more diverse at the Coolidge Corner Clubhouse. For the past 16 years, Morgan White Jr. and his photographic memory have been challenging diners every Monday night at the restaurant. Wearing a cowboy hat and dark sunglasses, White, aka "the Man from Trivia," circulates around the room with a microphone, asking customers for topics and then firing off related questions. On a recent evening, subjects ranged from ice hockey to U.S. geography to th

Beatles. Come up with the right answer, and he may throw a T-shirt or a baseball hat your way.

To White, trivia helps build camaraderie and allows detail-oriented people like himself connect over obscure subjects. "It's cheap, easy fun," he says.

ROLLIN', ROLLIN', ROLLIN'

Tucked away on the third floor of Jillian's entertainment megaplex, you'll find the newest game in town. In April, retro-style bowling alley Lucky Strike Lanes opened its doors just around the corner from Lansdowne Street.

With club music throbbing in the background (a DJ spins on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights) and vintage Hollywood cartoons playing on a video wall, Lucky Strike is a fun space. For $5.95 a person, you can bowl a game on one of 16 tenpin lanes lined with brightly colored flashing lights (shoe rental is an additional $3.50 a person).

The action, says general manager Chris Bruno, draws everyone from college students to young professionals to Red Sox fans. That's because bowling together is more social than just drinking together, says Heidi Finn, a 28-year-old business owner from Boston. "You've got the game, you've got action," she says, over a Smirnoff Ice. "It's not so loud that you can't talk to anybody. It's more relaxed."

When you need a break, you can grab a seat on one of the sleek couches that dot Lucky Strike's lounge area. Or cozy up to the long bar and catch a game on one of three massive high-definition screens. (There are also 18 smaller televisions and a ticker, so you won't miss a score.)

Before you go, take note: Bruno says the wait list for a lane can run up to two hours on a weekend night. But lucky for you, Lucky Strike's not the only game in town—Kings in the Back Bay has 16 tenpin lanes. Or for a late-night bowling binge, you can head to the 24-hour Boston Bowl on Morrissey Boulevard in Dorchester, where tenpin and candlepin lanes are available.

SLURPING LIKE A PRO

You've made it through the midweek slump and want a drink to celebrate. Instead of unwinding over the same old beer, head over to 33 Restaurant & Lounge for Hot off the Vine Wednesdays and add a little learning to your imbibing.

From 5 to 7 pm, wine director Jonas Atwood offers samples of four wines from the same region of France or Italy, plus literature on the wines (a recent tasting focused on Burgundy). For $20, you'll get four generous tastes and a platter of nibbles to complement the wine. If the weather cooperates, you can snag a seat outside at one of 33's wrought iron patio tables.

"We want to bring people in after work," says Atwood. "[Wine] is kind of intimidating. Hopefully, I can expose them to something new."

Sisters Alison and Amanda Bradstreet have been Wednesday regulars since the tastings began in April. "We're big into wines and we're trying to learn a lot about them," says Alison, a 25-year-old Back Bay resident.

"It's something different than sitting at a regular happy hour," adds Amanda, 22, of the North End. "It's a more relaxing atmosphere."

If you can't wait until Wednesday, Les Zygomates in the Leather District offers $25 "Tuesday Night Flights." Join sommelier Geoffrey Fallon for a humorous lesson on proper tasting etiquette; he'll have you sniffing and slurping like a pro in no time. After the lesson, you'll try four or five wines and enjoy savory bites to match. Tastings are held at 6 and 8 pm, and reservations are recommended.

Back Bay accountant Nancy Gogan comes often to the Les Zygomates tastings. Over two years, she's brought everyone from a date to her bosses to a gourmet-cooking aunt with her.

"It's fun, it's lighthearted, but by the same token, you walk away having been exposed to culture," she says. "It's not like going to a museum for four hours."

QUEENS FOR A DAY

Just a few blocks from ritzy Park Plaza, in Bay Village (tucked between the South End and the Theater District), you can enter another cultural universe. Since 1938, crowds of all kinds have flocked to Jacques Cabaret for live shows featuring female impersonators.

"Jacques is for everybody," says manager Donald Richard, who's worked at the club since 1960. "We've got everything here—guys, girls, drag queens, girls who want to be guys, guys who want to be girls. That's the mystique about Jacques. You're always guessing."

Each night, as many as five drag queens—clad in over-the-top evening wear and makeup—lip-synch, dance and flirt with audience members in hopes of scoring dollar bills. Don't worry—all clothes stay on! If you're in the mood, you can dance a little with the queens or invite one of them to sit on your lap. Or you can sit back and just watch the show. The club is especially popular for bachelorette parties. The performers always spotlight the brides-to-be during their acts, asking about wedding dresses, engagement rings and the like.

"The show is suggestive but not raunchy," says longtime performer Norell Gardner. "I know people bring their mothers and their grandmothers. I want people to laugh with us."

Get ready to stay out late. Shows, which run seven nights a week, don't start until 10:30 pm. Admission is $6 Sunday through Thursday and $10 Friday and Saturday. Jacques has a full bar (drinks are served in plastic cups) but no food service, although you can get a pizza delivered.

KIDDING AROUND

A quick trip north over the Zakim Bridge will land you in Somerville—home of the head-spinning Good Time Emporium.

You'll feel like a teenager at the boardwalk as you enter the 100,000-square-foot indoor amusement park filled with go-karts, laser tag, bumper cars, Skee-Ball, darts, batting cages, 60 pool tables and more than 200 arcade games. The emporium also has a private function room that doubles as a 21-and-older nightclub on weekends, and five separate bars, where you can get a 60-oz. pitcher of beer for $7.50.

Good Time draws everyone from teens to gruff guys covered in tattoos. "We have something for everyone," says manager Suzanne Rinfret. "There's a lot of fun and there's a lot of action."

There's no cover charge to enter the 12-year-old facility, which is open from 10 am to 1 am, 365 days a year. (There is, however, a charge to enter the nightclub.) Attractions are individually priced, and rides run between $2 and $6. Load up on tokens for the games, which spit out tickets that can be redeemed for prizes at a giant counter. And be prepared for sensory overload—you don't want the flashing neon lights, the buzz of the arcade games, and the 34 giant TVs to get in the way of your good time. IB

YOU'VE OUTGROWN THE TWENTYSOMETHING BAR SCENE. SO WHERE DO YOU GO WHEN YOU WANT A TOUCH OF CLASS?

FOR MATURE AUDIENCES

BY CAITLIN O'NEIL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MATT TUETON

In Boston, no matter how old you are, college is never really in the past. Every which way you turn in the local bar scene, you'll find coeds clad in flip-flops, low-slung jeans and baseball caps, ordering draft beers and chicken wings. But what if your college days are long behind you and you're looking for lively nightlife options that don't involve peanuts or plastic cups? To help you escape the ghosts of semesters past, we gathered a list of distinctly uncollegiate restaurants and bars where you can go out with friends and mingle with peers your own age. What's more, these spots all have thriving social scenes, which means that singles can take advantage of the bustling bar crowd and meet new people. One rule of thumb? Go where the good food is. Davio's owner Steve di Fillippo sums it up best: "Prices keep the college kids away."

ABE & LOUIE'S

793 Boylston St., 617-536-6300

Something about a steakhouse says splurge and celebrate. That feeling epitomizes the scene at Abe & Louie's, the popular old-school steakhouse on Boylston Street, where the bar hums with conversation most nights of the week. "It's hard to put a handle on why it's so popular," says bar manager Joe Howe, who worked at Joe's American Bar and Grill on Newbury for 20 years. "I've been at this a long time. I feel like my customers have migrated with me as they got older." Thursday is the big night here. Customers jockey for position and hoist drinks protectively as the crowd ebbs and flows. Beer and wine are available, but most folks have their hand around a cocktail.

While the restaurant is oversized in the manner of a classic New York steakhouse, the bar is a circumscribed space, hemmed in by a polished wood partition that provides extra seating and also makes it nearly impossible not to meet your neighbors. "I make lots of

75 Arlington St., 617-357-4810

A fixture on Newbury Street for 17 years, Davio's has occupied a 9,000-square-foot space at 75 Arlington, a former showroom on the first floor of the legendary Paine Furniture Building in Park Square, since 2002. The airy, urbane eatery is one of the city's most popular destinations among the over-30 set, and many regulars are veterans of the original Davio's.

"We thought of having a bigger bar with the renovation," says owner Steve di Fillippo, "but I wasn't necessarily thinking of creating a bar scene." Nonetheless, he's created one. The large oval bar dominates the entrance to the sleek eatery, balancing the room's towering columns. Groups also lounge in armchairs and couches that look out the 18-foot windows to the Park Plaza Hotel.

"What's great about the area is that it's a dining neighborhood," says di Fillippo. "Via Matta, Excelsior, Mistral, Grill 23—all the restaurants in the area are friendly with each other. Each one has its own niche; different, but still comfortable.

"People come here to eat. A lot of single people come in to eat at the chef's table overlooking the open kitchen. You can eat and not be bothered, or strike up a conversation with your neighbor. It's different from the regular bar scene, because there are no crowds around you jockeying for position. It's more low-key and civilized."

MISTRAL

223 Columbus Ave., 617-867-9300

Why do people flock to see Old Faithful? Because it delivers. The same is true of Mistral, which after seven years on the scene still draws crowds of sophisticated diners for its mod Provençal cuisine. "Over the years, we've gone through popularity with different age groups," says general manager Mark D'Alessandro, "but the 35–60 age range is definitely our most faithful clientele."

A stand of potted trees separates the bar from the dining room, creating a more relaxed area for mingling. Patrons sip martinis while they peruse the bar menu and munch on warm, buttered bread.

"A year ago I would have said that Thursday was our big night," says D'Alessandro, "but Thursdays in Boston have mellowed out." While reservations are still recommended for the restaurant, the lounge's bar is available on a first-come, first-served basis. Toward the end of the night, the room grows louder and gets more lively. More importantly, "there are no college kids," says D'Alessandro. "When you get older, you'd rather hang around with people your own age."

SAINT

90 Exeter St., 617-236-1134

Many nights during the week, Saint demonstrates the truth of the adage that life begins at 40. Well-dressed urbanites lounge in the club's chic underground space well into the night. The music is hip, but not off-putting. Drinks include exotic choices like key lime martinis and pear and cardamom sidecars, and Executive Chef Rene Michelena's bar menu matches the swank atmosphere: lobster spring rolls, salmon tartar Napoleon and Peking duck potstickers.

The retro lounge is divided into chummy nooks: the Bordello, a red den of low tables and dark alcoves; the Threshold, a cave of white leather with a vodka infusion bar; and the main room, a sprawling bar with luminescent blue columns and back-lit paneled walls. At first glance, all the tables seem to be reserved for the 75 founding "members" who paid $10,000 for that privilege. But there are a few low stools and small tables, plus ample room at the bar. While Saint caters to the powerful—businessmen and -women, politicians and celebrities who entertain friends and clients—there's room enough for everyone to rub elbows.

Bartender David Gracey recommends Wednesday and Thursday nights for the over-35 crowd. On Wednesdays, a live band plays soul, R&B and jazz. And a DJ on Thursdays plays retro '80s music. Publicist Diane Mantouvalos says, "Someone who's 22 is not as interested in that kind of music. It's the perfect place when you want to do more than just dinner."

troductions across the bar," says Howe. "Word of mouth gets people here. Someone in wn from New Jersey comes in, and I can tell them, Peter over there is from Jersey, but e's lived here for two years."

THE FEDERALIST

15 Beacon St., 617-670-1500

We discourage the noisy, crowded bar scene and cater to single diners and drinking connoisseurs who want a quality single-malt scotch or an Armagnac," says Nicholas Levielle, staurant manager of the Federalist in the XV Beacon hotel. Oenophiles appreciate the extensive wine list, which has won Wine Spectator's Grand Award for the past four years. Local esigner Celeste Cooper created a decor that feels stately but funky, with thick curtains, acked columns and white busts peppering a sleek room full of red fabrics and dark wood.

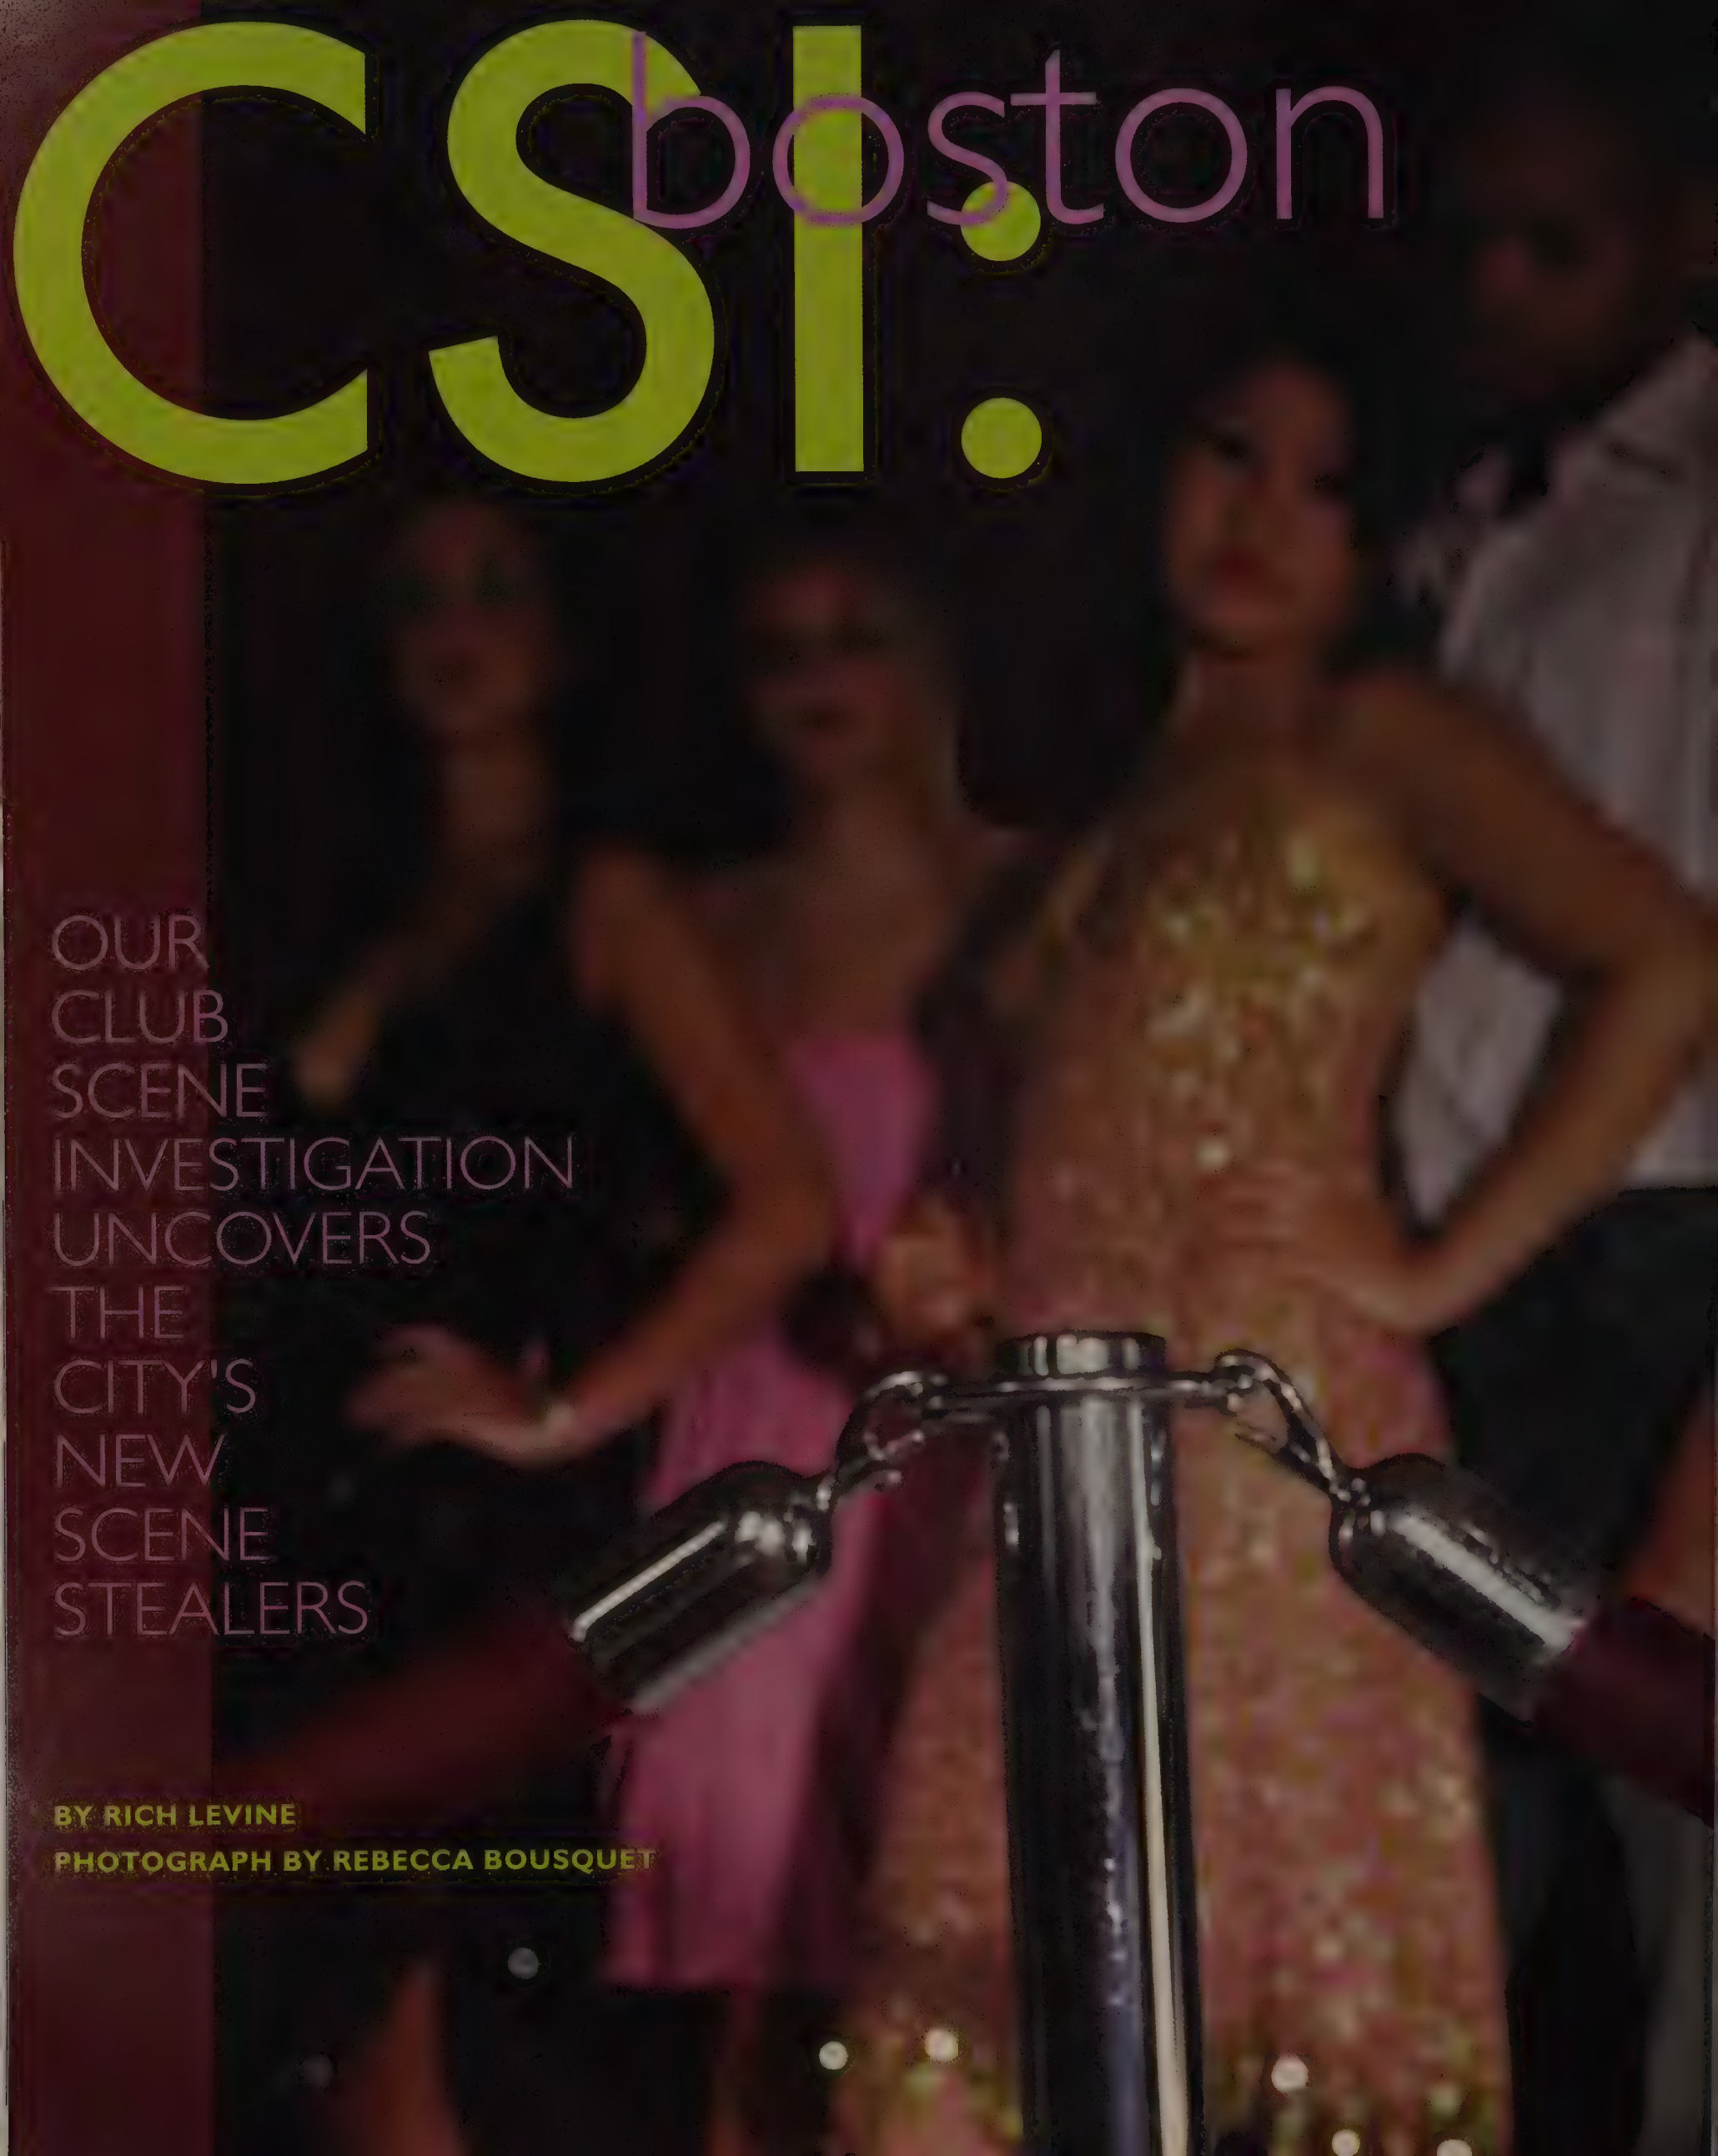
Friday and Saturday are the busiest nights but attract a younger crowd; the more mature minglers come on weeknights. If you're looking to meet someone, sit at the mahogany bar, where it's easy to strike up a conversation with State House folks, Beacon Hill residents and out-of-towners. Service is attentive and personal. By the end of the night, you'll feel like you've become a member of a hip, private club. IB

NO. 9 PARK

9 Park St., 617-742-9991

Beacon Hill's No. 9 Park is best known as a destination restaurant (chef Barbara Lynch is at the helm), but it also has the welcoming, intimate feel of a neighborhood bar. A crowd, six or seven at first, begins to arrive from the State House at about 4:30 pm, and then the regulars trickle in for a drink and a chat with their friendly neighborhood bartender. On a Wednesday night, a group of professionals settles in at the bar for Palmyras and orders up steak tartare. Other patrons chat and sip cocktails—the summer drinks menu includes pear or watermelon martinis as well as a full selection of pastis—while a businessman works through dinner amid the lively, though not boisterous, crowd.

The café and bar area, less formal than the restaurant, boasts about a dozen cottage white barstools and a scattering of marble tabletops where patrons can sip and sample from a scaled-down bar menu. Evenings, the day's fading light cuts through the front window, which looks out on the Common, to impart a cozy glow.



"We cater to a savvy crowd who has traveled, is influenced by what they see on the Food Network," says general manager Garrett Harker. "The younger crowd is more into stimulation and sensation, the older crowd is interested in learning something new, more concerned with quality. Our normal crowd is savvy about cocktails. They're drinking less, but drinking better."

OUR CLUB SCENE INVESTIGATION UNCOVERS THE CITY'S NEW SCENE STEALERS

BY RICH LEVINE

PHOTOGRAPH BY REBECCA BOUSQUET

The average Bostonian likely doesn't see much diversity in the local club scene. For many, a night of clubbing conjures up images of a merry-go-round of muscle-bound guys trying to chat up unapproachable women and then retreating to the bar until they're drunk enough to try again. Sure, the chance for romance is part of the reason that singles head out any night of the week, but local clubs are seeking to inject some variety into the scene by launching new nights with distinctive personalities of their own. From live funk and pop bands to old-school hip-hop, from packed dance floors to a sophisticated lounge scene, these new nights offer a variety of ways to party.

EXCELSIOR'S FLIRT

Thursday, 10 pm; no cover;
272 Boylston St., 617-426-7878

Already known as one of the city's top spots for elegant dining, Excelsior jumped into the clubbing game this summer with its new Thursday night venture, Flirt. We walked into the first-floor bar around 11:15 pm and found an already packed house of partygoers ranging from trendy twentysomethings to professionals in suits. A mobbed club is usually about as cool as a swift kick in the shins, especially when its time to make the arduous journey to the bar for another drink. But lucky for the Flirt crowd, there seemed to be a waitress at hand whenever the time was right. The music is current hip-hop and club beats, but Flirt isn't aiming to be a dance party. Instead, patrons can watch the Red Sox game on the large flat-screen TV mounted behind the bar and indulge in some good old-fashioned people-watching (and there are plenty worth watching at this high-class joint). The tunes and Excelsior's signature cocktails make for a festive evening, but not an absurdly late one. Around 1:30 am, after sipping one last round, we looked up from our martini glasses to find that most of the patrons had turned in for the night—a sure sign that Flirt's devotees have important jobs to wake up for.

FELT'S SUMMER SOLSTICE

Wednesday, 10 pm; no cover;
533 Washington St., 617-350-5555

Since early June, resident DJ Joe Bermudez has turned Felt's first-floor into a Wednesday night hotbed for up-and-coming music stars, like Ryan Cabrera and Mysteeq. We arrived one night just in time to catch the end of a performance by Skye Sweetnam, who opened for Britney Spears' most recent tour. Shortly after Sweetnam finished her set, Bermudez jumped behind the wheels of steel and got the crowd back into the dance-club vibe with the type of progressive music he's become known for. The crowd at Felt is young and active, but the club's multiple floors (and bars) make it easy to escape the first-floor madness and take a break with some pool or TV. An added incentive to check out Summer Solstice is the chance to make your own television debut. XY.TV, an all-music station carried by UPN Cable, tapes the weekly performances and also shoots interviews with the audience. I took a step toward my dream of TV stardom when I interviewed with XY host Jasmine for the station's—apparently not very selective—model search. I thought I killed, but my friends said my schtick was nothing but poorly recycled Seinfeld references. Still, the party went on, and it was 1:30 by the time I hailed a cab—the bright, young crowd means the action goes late at Felt.

RUMOR'S LOUNGE 54

Tuesday, Friday, 9:30 pm; $15;
100 Warrenton St., 617-943-0656

To celebrate its name change, this Theater District hangout (formerly called Vapor) has launched two new nights. The new name has also brought a step up in style. Rumor bouncers must adhere to a relatively strict dress code, which creates an air of sophistication that you don't find in a club where football jerseys and jeans are the fashion. When you walk in, it's clear this is truly a clubbers' club. Two large, all-white rooms with floor-to-ceiling pillars provide the setting for a clientele who come dressed to kill. There's plenty of bar space, and the floor is a perfect place for rhythmless saps to alienate any attractive woman within a 10-foot radius. (Take it from me.) If you want an evening of late-night dancing and pure partying, Rumor is worth the $15 cover charge.

SAINT'S LIVE MUSIC WEDNESDAYS

Wednesday, 9 pm; no cover;
90 Exeter St., 617-236-1134

In mid spring, Saint management replaced the club's Wednesday Jazz Night with a new theme, centered around jazz/funk cover group the Brian Walkley Band, in the bar's swanky downstairs lounge. We arrived at 9:30 pm to a packed house, but before we had the chance to ponder the grim prospect of spending the whole night on our feet, a waiter made his way over and kindly set us up with a table in a spot next to the dance floor, which is lined with comfortable lounge-type tables and seating. (This was no special treatment—we were incognito.) The band kicked off its set with Chaka Khan's "Ain't Nobody," and the crowd was instantly sold, filling the dance floor until it was time to head home. Wednesday at Saint proved to be a relaxed, comfortable partying experience that welcomed a wide array of people, from the dressed-up, after-work crowd to a bunch of guys wearing bowling jerseys.

33 RESTAURANT'S STYLE THURSDAYS

Thursday, 10 pm; no cover;
33 Stanhope St., 617-572-3311

On the little street that houses Bomboa and the Hard Rock Café, in between Berkeley and Clarendon streets, 33 Restaurant is the venue for Style Thursdays. We showed up early and opted to start in the downstairs lounge, equipped with a circular bar and cushy seating along the perimeter, and work our way up. At 11 pm, we followed the LED-lit stairs and bellied up to the first-floor bar, which at this point was more thickly settled with a diverse group ranging from sharp-dressed post-collegians to middle-aged professionals. A series of old- and new-school hip-hop tunes fueled an East Coast/West Coast rap debate among our group that luckily ended peacefully, and just in time for our last mass exodus of the night—to 33's outdoor patio, where the scene is far mellower than inside. There, you can chat with friends or get to know someone new without having to resort to shouting or sign language. The restaurant's first late-night enterprise, Style Thursdays is still gaining steam with its comfortable, laid-back, lounge atmosphere, but early success has already spawned a second night, coming to 33 Tuesdays this fall.

WEST STREET GRILLE'S OLD-SCHOOL THURSDAYS

Thursday, 10 pm; no cover;
15 West St., 617-423-0300

Old-school provides the musical theme for West Street Grille's new Thursdays, but the party theme varies depending on what clubbers ask for. Every week, West Street's customers can vote for and/or nominate different Thursday themes (think pajama parties and luaus) via e-mail, and management selects the winning theme. We showed up early enough to grab the lone table set up alongside the bar's open floor-to-ceiling windows and instantly took a liking to the music, a powerful set of old-school rap. The club was already brimming with regulars—some in their office clothes, some dressed for a long night of partying—and with only one downstairs bar, getting a drink could have been a problem. The lone bartender, however, was masterful, sliding full drinks along the bar to customers like an old-time sarsaparilla slinger. As the crowd grew, we held onto our prime real estate at the window while enjoying free drinks from Kuya Rum, the sponsor of that Thursday's party. (If the booze moves you to boogie, head up to the second floor later in the evening.) With a far more friendly, down-to-home atmosphere that you might expect from a club night, Old-School Thursdays did not disappoint, and West Street Grille is planning a huge party for August 19 with a sponsor, giveaways and live music. CLUB Q'S FRIDAY THROWDOWN

Friday, 9 pm; $5;
25 Union St., 617-778-8038

What happens when you combine an already popular local venue with one of the city's most recognizable DJs? We found out this spring when Club Q and DJ Massi began collaborating on Fridays. Want to see for yourself? Call ahead and get on the VIP list.

EMBASSY TUESDAYS

Tuesday, 10 pm; cover varies; 19+
36 Landsdowne St., 617-536-2100

Boston-based Anthem Events has taken charge of Embassy Tuesdays, the longest-running service industry night in the city. Anthem's influence will be felt in the diversity of the Tuesday themes, whether it's a charity benefit (currently in the works) or just a good old-fashioned party.

THE OFFICE'S UTOPIA SUNDAYS

Sunday, 9 pm; no cover;
3 Broad St., 617-367-5806

If you don't want to stop partying just because it's Sunday, head to the Office's Utopia Sundays, which launched in mid July. Coordinators are hoping the new night will develop into a Sunday night staple. "No one is playing meaningful music anymore," says resident DJ Bruno, "but we are gonna play solid stuff like James Brown and a lot of other deep, soulful music."

SMART CALL

Jeannette Angell, Ph.D. and prostitute, tells her tale of sex work in Boston in Callgirl.

Armed with a doctorate in anthropology, Jeannette Angell found herself needing more income than adjunct college teaching provided. So she answered an ad for call girls placed by one "Peach." While teaching a course called "On Death and Dying" at a local university, Angell was going around Boston on sex calls. Her position, as it were, on the sex industry is one of brisk, feminist professionalism. Like a practical, strategic geisha, she caters to her clients without much engagement, providing a service, neither degraded nor very engaged—with a few more sizzling and occasionally emotionally connected exceptions. While sometimes halfway scornful of the men's loneliness or need for control, she prides herself on winning them over. (Calling them "baby" seems to do a lot for the fictional intimacy.) Meanwhile, she's treating prostitution as an academic subject, noting her students' complex negative attitudes toward it and smiling secretly to herself. Her tone is often smart and businesslike, and the writing, like her work, is neither steamy nor entirely cynical. But the emotional and physical perils of call girl work, and Angell's allegedly "OK" drug use do leave the reader wondering.

REVIEW

LATIN UP

Sophia's brings its groove to the table with a bold new menu.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

When Michael Schlow and Chris Myers opened Great Bay in Kenmore Square's Commonwealth Hotel, with accomplished chef Jeremy Sewall behind the stove, I was skeptical as to whether a restaurant with substantial culinary aspirations could crack the neighborhood's demographics, displacing the Fenway Frank and beer as the sustenance of choice. With the arrival of Jeffrey P. Fournier in the kitchen at Sophia's, on the opposite side of the park from Kenmore Square, serious, sophisticated dining now surrounds Boston's beloved ballpark. Fenway, you're covered.

Lovers of Latin music and dancing have made Sophia's a magnet for revelers for more than five years, but since my own interests run to the dining scene rather than the salsa scene, it had escaped my notice. With the arrival of Fournier, whose long and fruitful apprenticeship under culinary prophet Lydia Shire (Pignoli, Locke-Ober, Excelsior) has made him a food force to be reckoned with, there are imaginatively conceived and professionally executed palate pleasers to be had at this address.

Sophia's is a multilevel establishment. A dark space below grade has a long bar with 12 stools, and white-clothed tables arrayed around the periphery of the room. Salsa dancing takes place on the second floor, and above that there's an open roof deck (appropriately named Cielo) for dancing under the stars. Serious dining holds center stage in the dining room and the Fedora bar on the first floor, up a half dozen steps from the entrance. Here, diners sit at an imposing, dark wooden chef's table for 10 in high backed, bright yellow chairs, or on cushioned banquettes that line walls of old, exposed brick fitted with custom-designed wine storage space. Random rays from track lighting near the high ceiling penetrate the semi-darkness of this cavernous room, picking up splashes of color from abstract acrylic paintings created by chef Fournier himself, whose artistry obviously extends beyond the kitchen. Heavy, dark blue draperies hide the view of the neighboring parking lot and fast-food joint.

Sophia's menu format includes "small plates," "mini-plates" and "food and liquor pairings," all giving expression to the varied palate of Central and South American cuisine. While small plate dining has gained an increasing number of devotees over the last year or so, Fournier has added a new twist with his creatively designed liquor-food combinations. While I found this approach interesting—and at least one or two of its embodiments exquisite—I found much greater value and satisfaction in Fournier's small plates and mini-plates.

Two mini-plates arrived gratis as amuses bouche: a crunchy shrimp poached with saffron in court bouillon and a morsel of crispy snapper over Peruvian blue potato. Both deserved to be promoted to the menu full time, especially the impeccably textured shrimp, which came with a dollop of provocative paprika cocktail sauce further spiced with warm, aromatic cumin. The first dish I ordered, a mini-plate of chorizo with roasted garlic ($4), was a tapas-size treat—one generous bite of crispy Spanish sausage—combining salty, well-spiced, heartily flavored pork and mellow, slightly sweet garlic puree, a fine use of this pungent perennial. Another mini-plate, the arepas con queso with mango butter ($3), seemed starchy and uninteresting when I first bit into it, so I put it aside and ultimately took it home in a doggie bag. When I rewarmed this layered cornmeal and cheese combination the next day, it became much more inte esting, with the moist richness of the co and creamy goodness of the cheese stan ing out. A third mini-plate, roast ma nated tomato with white anchovy fille ($3)—a small cylinder of roast toma mousse with three tiny slivers of white chovy crisscrossed on top—made t strongest impression. The combination fruity olive oil, sweet-tart tomatoes m lowed by roasting, and pleasantly fish salty anchovies made this mini-plate mini-symphony of flavors.

Sophia's small plates, about three tim the size of its minis, were roughly equiv lent to substantial appetizers in m restaurants, with two to three of the equaling a main course. The 16 sm plates ranged across a broad spectrum ingredients and preparations. Caramelize sea scallop with mango, arepas and chicha ron ($8) brought a single, gargantuan sc lop carefully seared to preserve its delica sweet, nutlike flavor and satiny textu The garnishes—a small triangle of t arepas con queso, a slice of sweet, ri mango and a small rectangle of rich po belly—made the dish not only exciting the range of taste and textures presente but also surprisingly filling considering modest size. Palomilla steak with saffr rice, pickled egg and grilled ramps ($13) hearty hunk of top round steak, flavor and resilient but reasonably tender, arriv rare as ordered. The rice and ramp species of scallion) accompaniments ma little impression, lost amid a busy presen tion, but a garnish of caramelized onio not mentioned on the menu, comp mented the steak superbly. Chicken san cho ($7) brought a small casserole chicken stew populated with large cubes potatoes, strips of chicken breast, lots garlic, and slivers of chili peppers, a hea robust brew. Finally among the sm plates, the beer- and brown sugar–brais taco with crème Mexicana ($7) resembl a Mayan panucho, with an open, warm t tilla—soft as opposed to toasted—cove with semi-sweetened pork and a cilant accented sauce.

On a second visit I decided to sam the food and liquor pairings, orderi black cherry and vanilla vodka, mu rooms and cheese ($10); the dark spic ım with sugar cane–skewered shrimp 512) and the hibiscus liqueur with hand- ıred braciola and beet aioli ($11), in that ·der, as suggested by my waiter. With ıese dishes, Fournier has tried to choose kotic alcoholic concoctions whose fla- ors, when sipped between bites of the od, create harmonies, counterpoints and elodies on the palate. With a couple of ıem he succeeded. The earthy, exotic fla- or of the mushrooms, saltiness of the neese and fruity-herbal sweetness of the queur in the mushroom combination ade it the best of these offerings. The pair skewered shrimp had first-rate flavor and xture, and their accompaniment of thin ices of toasted coconut and a drizzle of cely balanced sugar cane vinaigrette hit e spot, but the spiced rum seemed rather side the point. Finally, but not least, the ıy portion of austerely dry, salty beef bra- ola was pleasantly offset by a mildly eet beet aioli drizzled on the top, with le cinnamon-laced hibiscus liqueur lding interesting nuances.

With its menu offerings, Sophia's pro- ded a basket of thick toasts of marvelous hole-grained bread from Iggy's, accom- nied by a pesto puree lively in its fresh sil, pignoli nuts and garlic. Sophia's ne list is small but serviceable, and vir- ally all the wines on the list are offered by the bottle or glass. But while the bottle prices range from $24 to $40, the per glass prices are almost all $8. Pours are generous, so that one can enjoy the equivalent of nearly a full bottle of the higher-priced wines for only $24. Most noteworthy among the wines I tried were the 2002 Alamos Bonarda from Argentina, full bodied and well structured; the 1999 Sierra Cantabria Rioja and the 2002 Lily pinot noir from the Sonoma Coast.

Sophia's desserts, all $6, included mango flan with eucalyptus honey and lavender cream, a smooth, creamy, slightly sweet custard that tasted more of honey than mango but was a cooling, refreshing counterpoint to many of the provocatively spiced dishes that preceded it. Moving to the chocolate side of the spectrum, we devoured the warm chocolate soufflé cake, dark and bittersweet, served in a pool of coffee-flavored crème anglaise and garnished with mint leaves, candied pignoli and fresh whipped cream.

Service at Sophia's, even on a busy Saturday night, was efficient, attentive and reasonably well informed. The lively, upbeat atmosphere of this multifaceted establishment and the creative, inspired performance of Fournier and his staff in the kitchen will make this a popular venue for some time to come. iB

Season of the Switch

New cookbook title a Suspenser for Shire…How's Howell's beans?

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

On the surface, summer is a quiet time in the restaurant business. But behind the scenes, there's plenty of action, as industry notables respond with ambition, creativity and humor to ill-fated business decisions, the trajectory of culinary career demands, even a surplus crop of cabbage.

First up: Lydia Shire. Fifteen months after launching Excelsior firmly into the top level of Boston dining, she's leaving to write a cookbook. But not really leaving, she insists. "It's still my restaurant," she says, and she will oversee menu development "totally" when Eric Brennan officially takes over the kitchen in September. Degrees of separation: Brennan's position as executive chef at Harvest will be filled by his former sous chef, Keith Pooler, who himself was the opening sous chef at Excelsior.

Lydia Shire is scaling back her involvement with Excelsior to write a cookbook.

"I could not be happier with Excelsior," says Shire. "I've accomplished each and every goal." But she says it's "impossible" to develop and oversee the restaurant's complex menus and create a cookbook simultaneously, at least the kind of cookbook Shire envisions. She describes it as a "legacy" for her four children, particularly her youngest, 14-year-old Alex, an aspiring chef who's been wielding a sharp knife in the kitchen for 10 years and hasn't cut himself even once, a source of great pride to his mother.

"It will be a heartfelt book with unapologetic food," says Shire, who hints at surprises to come. "I want to combine my love of color and some of my crazy ideas in a book. At one point, I wanted to write a pop-up cookbook." How about scratch-'n'-sniff? Seriously, Shire is exploring some cool graphic ideas while she collaborates with a writer on a proposal, and her working title is perfect (sorry, can't tell). If she should change her mind, here's a suggestion: Getting in Touch with Your Innard Chef: No Guts, No Glory.

Meanwhile in Arlington, Bob Sargent, chef/owner of Flora, is content to stay right where he is. "I'm not super ambitious," he says. But he's ever alert to new marketing opportunities. Flora's Web site promotes its homemade ice cream, "hot" T-shirts, retro refrigerator magnets and kimchi. Why kimchi, the Korean fermented-cabbage condiment? Farmer Steve Parker, whose Lunenburg farm grows produce for Flora, had asked Sargent to create and bottle a dressing that Parker could sell at his farmstand to encourage purchases of an excessive crop of bok choy and napa cabbage. Next, Sargent made up a big batch of kimchi, "just doing it for kicks," and sold it at local farmers markets. And now? "Now he doesn't have any more cabbage!" laughs Sargent.

Sargent's latest menu addition is what he calls "the best coffee experience you can have." Flora is the first restaurant to offer GHH Select Terroir Coffee, the latest venture from George Howell. Howell, whose Coffee Connection was the original catalyst for coffee culture, fared poorly with the now-closed Copa Café in Lexington, which featured Terroir coffees. Howell says he's "relieved" that the Copa misstep is over and enthusiastic about every aspect of his new company, from his on-site storage of green coffee beans at temperatures of 40 below zero to his travels to South America to source rare "single-origin" coffees. Call it the Second Cupping of George Howell. IB

WINE

Riesling on the Rise

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

It's finally happened. After years of being ignored, German Riesling has come out of the woodwork. I got tired of talking about it over the years. Yes, Riesling is my favorite white grape; yes, my top choice with lobster is 10-year-old Mosel kabinett; yes, they can age; yes, yes, yes! After I eventually gave up preaching, it seems, the Riesling Renaissance happened. Suddenly everyone (well not everyone) has got Riesling on their palate.

Let's start with some facts: Americans have been slowly and steadily drinking more German wine over the past several years. During 2003, sales jumped 19 percent to almost 2 million cases—still far behind Italy, Australia, France, Chile and Spain, but good enough for sixth place. The kind of wine we're importing from Germany today, however, is not what your parents or grandparents drank. That's because most of what's on the market now is predominantly made with Riesling, which is a far cry from how it used to be in the days of Liebfraumilch. That blended, often cloying wine once enjoyed great popularity before we discovered chardonnay and pinot grigio, but even in its best days it never had the invigorating zip of a good Riesling.

The biggest obstacle Germany has had to overcome is a long-standing equation of sweet wine with low quality. The truth is, if you're making a relatively blah white wine, the quickest, cheapest and easiest way to cover up its flaws is by making it a little bit sweet. And many German wines we used to see—the brands that dominated retail shelves in the 1970s, when Germany was a much bigger factor in the U.S. than it's ever been since—tasted cheap and sweet. At the same time, Germany's finest Riesling-based wines have traditionally been sweet too, but for different reasons. The prime Mosel and Rhine growing districts in the country's southwest are hilly and relatively cold. The Riesling grapes grown there develop brilliantly complex fruit and mineral aromas but also retain strong natural acidity as a result of the marginal weather and rocky soil. Most of the top winemakers in these areas use natural methods of producing sweetness in the wines to balance off the abundance of tart, appetizingly acidic flavors that develop over the course of a growing season. That's why they make sweet wines: because a little sugar enhances the wine's flavor.

So some of us may have gotten this and overcome our fear of sugar, and maybe even begun to look upon some sweetness in a wine as chic and sophisticated. If so, a lot of the credit originates in the culinary field. Chefs understand how to balance flavors and textures, and Riesling's extraordinary versatility with food has not gone unnoticed by many of them. Then again, so many of the dishes we see at cutting-edge restaurants today feature sweet and fruity flavors that partner effortlessly with German Rieslings. The brilliant acids prolong the wine's flavor and encourage synergy with seafood, Asian and vegetarian dishes.

Another reason for their newfound popularity is that German Rieslings tend to be low in alcohol, quite often under 10 percent. My favorite district, the middle Mosel, frequently produces Riesling that tips the scales at only 7.5 to 8.5 percent. Which means you can have a few glasses and experience clarity of thinking almost as great as if you had finished one glass of a 14.5 percent Australian or Californian chardonnay. The wines are also great in summertime because you can chill them to an extreme and still taste quite a bit of flavor.

Probably the worst rap German wine gets is that the labels are confusing. If you know how to decode the information they provide, German wines are very easy to buy because you can predict the exact style of the flavors, but not everyone wants to invest the time to learn the terminology. Recently though, the labels have become cleaner and easier to read, the terms less, well, Teutonic. In the past, I would have said that your best bet would be to find a Riesling kabinett or spatlese (these are ripeness designations, with the latter generally producing a richer, lusher wine than the former) from a top producer in the Mosel-Saar-Ruwer. (Ask your retailer, there are several dozen reputable names.) But today, more variety is available. A new classification for Rieslings that are basically dry, Classic, will simplify your buying process if you prefer wines without much residual sugar. I personally prefer the slightly sweeter style, but many people are drinking drier Rieslings today, and Classic is made for them. All the label indicates is the name of the producer, the region, the grape and the word Classic. What could be simpler? It's almost as easy as buying Chardonnay. IB

ONGOING

Movies and Music: Entertainment Tonight

This summer, the Boston Harbor Hotel is teeming with twilight activities. The hotel's outdoor movies, music and dance programs are free and are open to the public as well as hotel guests. All the events take place on the outdoor patio, where you can sit at the Intrigue Café's tables along the water and order dinner (or just drinks) while the sun sets over the water. Friday nights are Movies by Moonlight, where you can catch a classic film in the gloaming. On August 13, Humphrey Bogart and Lauren Bacall star in Howard Hawks' 1946 detective movie The Big Sleep; Aug. 20 brings 12 Angry Men, Sidney Lumet's 1957 courtroom drama starring Henry Fonda. Wednesday nights get lively with the Summer Swing series—dance demos, instruction and then a free-for-all with big-band music. Every Tuesday night (6-10 pm) is comedy night, which features improv troupes from the Improv Asylum. Finally, the Blues Barge series takes place on the floating stage Thursday evenings (also at 6 pm). Next up on the barge: Aug. 12 is E.C. Scott & Smoke, and Aug. 19 is Toni Lynn Washington. Boston Harbor Hotel, Rowes Wharf, Boston (617-439-7000).

Music: The Mack-Dada Is Back

It's been a good year so far for Kool Keith. Critical Beatdown, the debut album by his first crew, Ultramagnetic MCs, was re-released with the full-blown "classic" treatment: bonus tracks, interviews and all the bells and whistles that accompany an album that has been accepted into the hip-hop canon. Keith also has two new CDs out: Thee Undertakerz (released in May) showcases his Reverand Tom alias, and Diesel Truckers (out this week) reunites him with longtime buddy Kutmasta Kurt. Keith's lyrics have always featured the raunchy braggadocio so customary in hip-hop, but his absurdist, left-field rhyming style sets him apart. Boston's Porn Theater Ushers share the stage with the legendary Keith and will have to work pretty hard to measure up. Fortunately, based on the advance word on their new album, Taxachusetts, it sounds like they're up to the task. Middle East Downstairs, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-492-9181). 8 pm. $17.

CityScope: It's a Nice Day for a White Wedding

Everyone has a few skeletons in their closet. If one of yours involves five yards of seafoam green taffetta or mauve chiffon and lace applique, it's time to air your dirty laundry. Former bridesmaids are invited to don the worst "you'll never wear this again" monstrosity and recoup the dignity lost on their bridezilla friend's sartorial snafu at THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN's third annual Bridesmaids' Ball at Hurricane O'Reilly's. The girl in the most frightful frock stands to walk away with a bachelorette night on the Bustonian, a booty of unmentionables from Kiss Me Lingerie, or a free makeup application. If you want to out-do the competition, head to Beaucage, Guiliano Day Spa, Lord's and Lady's or Maksou Salon for a potentially prize-winning, (and discounted!) gravity defying up-do. You don't have to show up looking like a satin-blend circus tent—the prettiest and sexiest bridesmaids take home prizes, and, as always, we're looking for a few good groomsmen too. The grab-happy partygoer who catches the bouquet wins the grand prize: an all-expenses paid weekend getaway for her and her friends to Mohegan Sun. Tickets are $5, and proceeds benefit the Boston Komen Race for the Cure. Hurricane O'Reilly's, 150 Canal St., Boston (617-722-0161). 7 pm.

Dance: It Takes Two

In addition to offering a mean mixed grill, Argentina is also the source of the sultry, sexy tango. Unfortunately, tickets to Buenos Aires don't come cheap. And while watching impossibly tan couples on TV dip and spin with paper numbers safety-pinned to their backs is a cheap fix, it lacks a certain je ne sais quoi. Those who seek the real deal can head to Ryles Jazz Club August 20 for a dance performance to live music. Mass Tango, led by musician and vocalist Bernardo Monk and his wife, performer Fernanda Cajide, brought their talents stateside, direct from Argentina, in 2001. Their performance at Ryles is a rare opportunity for enthusiasts to experience a tango performance the way Argentineans do—in a club with food, wine and friends. Monk leads the music with jazz-inspired vocals and sax, while Cajide tears up the floor with her seductive yet elegant three-step. Call it the anti-lambada. Ryles Jazz Club, 212 Hampshire St., Cambridge (617-876-9330). www.rylesjazz.com. 9 pm. $10.

FRIDAY/AUG. 20

Performing Arts: Bebopping with Bird

Jeff Robinson is best known in town for his band's residency at the Lizard Lounge. The Jeff Robinson Trio has been accompanying poets and spoken-word artists for the club's poetry performance night for years. But Robinson is also a writer-actor-director who's performed all over the country in Live Bird: An Intimate Portrait of Charlie "Bird" Parker, a show he created about the legendary jazz saxophonist. During the play, a one-man, song-filled performance set in a Harlem bar in the summer of 1947, Robinson talks with imaginary characters about Bird's life, imitates sax great Lester Young and, of course, performs some of Bird's songs. Cambridge Center for Adult Education, 56 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-6789). 8 pm. $10.

Big-Hearted BoSox

Much—often too much—is made in this city about the on-field performance of our pro athletes. So every once in a while it's nice to highlight some of the positive things these guys do with their time off the field. On August 12, just days after the Red Sox return from a 13-day road trip (the season's longest), Johnny Damon and Tim Wakefield host the Pitching in for Kids All-Star Charity Golf Classic Kick-Off Party at the Comedy Connection.

"Those guys are so charitable and totally support everything we do," says Pitching in for Kids founder Carol Troxell of the Sox stars, who are hosting for a second straight year. "It's just so much fun when they come down to help us out."

The festivities begin at 7 pm with a reception led by Damon and Wakefield (along with WBZ-TV sports anchor Steve Burton). Following that, silent and live auctions featuring items like a knuckleball lesson from Wake or a batting lesson from everyone's favorite Unfrozen Caveman Outfielder. Other items up for bid include signed team jerseys, a trip to Mardi Gras and tickets to see Celine Dion in Las Vegas.

The night finishes up with a comedy show featuring some of Boston's top comics, like Kevin Knox, Paul Nardizzi and Mark Donovan. Admission includes light fare from Flemings Steak House and cocktails from Grey Goose Vodka and Sam Adams. Proceeds benefit Pitching in for Kids, the Franciscan Hospital for Children and the Ron Burton Training Village.

Comedy Connection, 245 Quincy Market, Boston (617-367-3322). Aug. 12, 7 pm. $100. www.pitchinginforkids.org. —Rich Levine

Beach Party

Doc looks at big waves and the folks who ride them.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Stacy Peralta goes from sidewalk surfing to the watery kind in Riding Giants. The skateboarder turned moviemaker focused on the 1970s skate innovations that he was a part of in 2002's dynamite documentary Dogtown & Z-Boys. Now he offers a documentary whose title has a double meaning: The surfers profiled in Riding Giants are indeed larger-than-life pioneers, while riding giants is exactly what they do. Peralta's movie concentrates on big-wave surfing—finding monster waves and challenging them on a board.

Riding Giants looks at big-wave surfing, from the 1950s to the present

If you saw Dogtown, which is currently being adapted into a fictionalized Hollywood movie, you know Peralta has as many moves in the editing room as he had on the skateboard. Riding Giants unfurls in a similar flurry of well-chosen images, crackerjack editing and cool music (this time including Link Wray, the Ruts, David Bowie and the Stray Cats). After the amusing opening section called "1,000 Years of Surfing in Less Than Two Minutes"—a mock-documentary sequence with deadly-earnest narration about Polynesian surfers, Calvinist missionaries banning the sport in Hawaii, and folks like Duke Kahanamoku reviving it early in the 20th century—Riding Giants hits the water in post–World War II southern California, where a surfing subculture was emerging.

The 1950s soon brought not only lighter, fiberglass-covered boards, but also the beckoning waves of Hawaii, thanks to a 1953 Associated Press photo of big-wave surfers at Oahu's Makaha Point that landed on many front pages. Soon, California's best surfers were heading to Oahu. Riding Giants interviews many of that generation's surfers, including Greg Noll, the charismatic Californian who was usually first on his board at the biggest waves. Peralta also includes great vintage footage of Noll and his contemporaries on the water. Noll dabbled in 1960s surf films, so the footage is presumably from his movies, and the sight of Noll's hot-dogging, set to Link Wray's ultra-grungy instrumental "Rumble," is the movie's defining image.

This section is clearly Riding Giants' best. The 20 or so late-1950s surfers who stayed at Waimea lived together in a Quonset hut on the beach, existing on as little money as possible and leading a truly alternative lifestyle. This group comes across like The Right Stuff's elite crew of test pilots—guys who were competitively pushing each other, but bound together like a surrogate family. Peralta smartly films some of his interviews in black-and-white, and having the old footage in vivid color and the new in B&W liberates the old from any potential mustiness.

It's funny to learn that the original wave of big-wave surfers divides surf chronology into pre-Gidget and post-Gidget eras, and to learn that the Sandra Dee movie about a surf-mad teenybopper led to an explosion in surfing, from about 5,000 U.S. surfers in 1959 to 2 million in 1963. It also led to the explosion of surf music, beach party movies and surf films (like The Endless Summer) that we immediately think of as surf culture (of course, Noll has choice words for that surf boom).

Two of Riding Giants' three parts look at the post-Gidget era. The first of these heads to northern California, where in 1975 Jeff Clark discovered the Bay area's answer to Waimea—the remote Mavericks area—and surfed its big waves alone for 15 years because no one else dared traverse the rocky area with him. Peralta includes an interesting sequence in which some Mavericks surfers discuss the nuts and bolts of big-wave surfing: strategies on catching waves, recovery tactics after wiping out and so on.

The final third of Riding Giants has its moments but lacks the personality of the first or the insight of the second. It's entirely about Laird Hamilton, who nicely bridges the gap between the pioneering surfers and today's surfers, since he's the stepson of the first group's Billy Hamilton. The younger Hamilton accelerated the pursuit of big waves by developing "tow-in surfing," in which the surfer is towed into the biggest, fastest offshore waves by a Jet-Ski, eliminating the slower paddling that previously made it impossible to catch such waves.

Noll himself declares Laird Hamilton the best big-wave surfer ever, but Hamilton comes off as too slick (there's mention of a GQ photo shoot), and the screen time devoted to him feels out of whack. One wonders why Laird's wife, volleyballer Gabrielle Reece, is interviewed, and it turns out Riding Giants is a merger of early-stage film projects that Peralta and Hamilton were working on, and that one of its producers, Jane Kachmer, is both Hamilton and Reece's agent. This artistic compromise sends the otherwise strong Riding Giants out on a weak note. iB

If you wanted to assemble a triple feature of defendant Susan McDougal, who served time after she wouldn't play ball with special prosecutor Ken Starr. As has usually been the case with these recent exposés, the mainstream media are also taken to task for swallowing the bait without exploring the truths behind it. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and suburbs.)

Metallica: Some Kind of Monster ★★★

It's interesting enough to keep nonfans of heavy metal involved, though this 145-minute documentary about the making of Metallica's St. Anger album is longer than it needs to be. What's interesting is that the latest by directors Joe Berlinger and Bruce Sinofsky (Paradise Lost) is the most psychological of rock movies. Literally. Reeling from the deterioration of their personal relationships, the band's three core members enter counseling with a "performance enhancement therapist" and strive to make the band a democracy, so their Dr. Phil–like shrink is there at all the recording sessions—sometimes easing tensions, sometimes adding to them. As drummer Lars Ulrich sums it up, those sessions are an attempt to make "aggressive music without negative energy," which isn't easy, especially when macho frontman James Hetfield (who enters rehab during the sessions) and the more emotional Ulrich keep struggling for control of the band. They should've called this 12 Steps to Metal. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

My Architect ★★★

Much like Mark Moskowitz's The Stone Reader, Nathaniel Kahn's movie is documentary as compelling quest. Kahn's quest is to learn more about his father, architect Louis Kahn, who died in 1974 when the filmmaker was a boy. It turns out the elder Kahn juggled three families. (He remained married to the same woman while fathering children with two others.) The movie's drama is in its depiction of someone who was world-class in his field, yet whose personal life was a farce. The director struggles to understand how his mother and Louis Kahn's other families could tolerate such a situation, as he, like them, expresses his love for the man. With no easy answers, Kahn is left to look for answers in his father's work, which takes him from Philadelphia to Bangladesh. (At the Museum of Fine Arts, Aug. 12, 15 and 21.)

Rivers and Tides ★★★

Last year's imaginative documentary returns yet again for more shows at the Museum of Fine Arts. Its subject, Scottish artist Andy Goldsworthy, is a master of "in nature" sculptures that use found materials and often get swept away by the elements. Over the course of the movie, we see him construct several, but director Thomas Riedelsheimer doesn't merely show us Goldsworthy's finished works, he swoops up on them from ground level or swirls upon them from above, letting us see them in ways we would not normally experience. (At the Museum of Fine Arts, Aug. 14, 15 and 22.)

She Hate Me ★

Spike Lee's latest—yes, its title takes inspiration from the XFL player who dubbed himself "He Hate Me"—starts out like an unsatisfying example of Lee's recent ragged storytelling. As with Bamboozled, he begins with an intriguing premise, this time about a young black exec (Anthony Mackie) at a company where an Enron-like scandal is about to explode. But then the film drifts and drifts. After a half hour Lee loses interest in that corporate plot and switches to uninteresting, poorly written character drama. Only this time the poor drama stretches to utterly tedious lengths, with periodic stops on a half dozen clumsy soapboxes. And the subplot involving lesbians may be the single most bogus piece of male-penned "femininity" in decades. A sure contender for the year's worst. (At Kendall Square.)

Spider-Man 2 ★★★

Remove the least effective element from Spider-Man—Willem Dafoe's puzzling, uninteresting Green Goblin—and it's no surprise Sam Raimi's sequel is better. Of the several comic-book adaptations to give us crime-fighters with troubled pasts and mucho emotional baggage, like Daredevil and The Hulk, this is clearly the best, for the same reasons the best parts of the first movie clicked: the depth Tobey Maguire, Kirsten Dunst and James Franco bring to their characters, the fun physical release of the action scenes, and the bold comic-book charge of the zingy tabloid editor played by J.K. Simmons. This movie is proof positive that not only can event movies be smart and emotionally complex, they should be. Raimi has already made one fine sequel, Evil Dead 2, and its inimitable star Bruce Campbell has a very funny cameo here. Now Raimi's done it again. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Thunderbirds ★½

As souped-up as some of the movies made from TV series are these days, the successful ones still capture some essence of the original, even if it's just cheesiness to spoof. Thunderbirds doesn't even have that. With its shaky electronic marionettes and its Swinging London visual style, the original Thunderbirds was an instantly cheesy slice of post-James Bond, post-Beatles pop culture. But in updating the futuristic original into a very Americanized contemporary live-action movie, whatever charm the original Gerry Anderson production had has been pushed to the side. The dominant plotline here is a dull Spy Kids knock-off, while Ben Kingsley's villain is as bland as the heroes. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Halle Berry (right) stars with Sharon Stone in Catwoman.

Reel World: Roxbury

The Roxbury Film Festival calls local talent to action.

Ky-Mani Marley, son of reggae legend Bob Marley, in One Love

The sixth annual Roxbury Film Festival unreels August 18th through 22nd, showcasing a bumper crop of local film talent, as well as some respected veterans. Since its inception, the RFF has been a forum for local filmmakers and industry professionals of color to screen their art and present a view often neglected in mainstream cinema. This year's festival, which is co-sponsored by ACT Roxbury and the Color of Film Collaborative, is themed Celebrating the Vision and the Voice of New England Filmmakers of Color.

In addition to screening feature films, shorts and documentaries by local filmmakers, the RFF offers inspiration for amateur actors, directors and producers. Seasoned industry professionals participate in panel discussions, acting workshops and Q&A sessions after most films—all tools to help future stars navigate the biz. Actor Ernie Hudson offers a workshop called Tips for Sustaining an Acting Career, and author Sam Greenlee takes part in a Q&A session on the festival's opening night, following a screening of the 1973 film he co-wrote, The Spook Who Sat by the Door. Others speaking at the RFF include actors Enrie Hudson and Hill Harper and directors Tim Reid, Charles Barnett and Topper Carew.

For local producer/director Carew, who screens his new documentary, We Don't Die, We Multiply: The Robin Harris Story, the festival is a career milestone. "Growing up in Roxbury and having your films shown at the MFA is kind of mind-blowing," says Carew. "There is an energy that I get from Boston and a connection that I get that is like no other place."

Aug. 18-22. Call 617-541-3900, ext. 223, or visit www.actroxbury.org or www.roxburyfilmfestival.org for locations, a schedule and additional information.

Shifting the Weight

John Mayer replaces nervous energy with broadened songcraft.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

John Mayer remembers walking down Newbury Street to eat at Friday's twice a week on a frequent diner's card. It's part of what Mayer calls his "emotional connection" with Boston. The year was 1997, and he was an aspiring guitarist from Connecticut who had enrolled at Berklee College of Music when he realized that pumping gas after graduation from Fairfield High wasn't helping to fuel his music career.

John Mayer goes for a more electric sound on his new CD, Heavier Things.

"Everybody kind of turns into a butterfly when they leave their hometown," says Mayer, 26. "I just remember the new experiences of walking around Boston—really for the first time—and going, 'Wow, these three or four people here really want to include me in whatever is going on.'"

These days, a lot of people want to include Mayer in their social plans for another reason: He's a pop star with over 5 million CDs sold thanks to songs like "No Such Thing," "Clarity" and the Grammy-winning prom favorite "Your Body Is a Wonderland."

It's quite a stretch from Berklee, where Mayer's idol was blues hotshot Stevie Ray Vaughan. "I wanted to be a guitar virtuoso and went to Berklee to be one," he says. "I might catch flack for saying this, but the guitar is a relatively easy instrument to play. It's easy to control and begin mastering in your own way. And I didn't know that. Once I got there, I went, 'Oh wow, this guy's doing it and that guy's doing it and that guy's doing it.' I said, 'Well, I've got to change my plan.'

"I figured out that I don't just want to be a great guitar player," Mayer says from a Nevada tour stop. "I want to be able to devise the melodies that make people think the guitar playing is great on top of it anyway."

"I wanted to be listenable," adds Mayer, who left Berklee after a year and moved to Atlanta, where he honed his skills as a solo singer-songwriter. "I couldn't find a band, and I didn't want to wait," he explains. "I learned so much about songwriting at that point. And if it doesn't work on an acoustic guitar, it ain't gonna work."

When he did get a band together, Mayer was still identified mainly for his acoustic guitar playing, especially on his breakthrough hit, "No Such Thing." With its refrain "I wanna run through the halls of my high school, I wanna scream at the top of my lungs" capped by his rising falsetto, that opening track to his 2001 CD Room for Squares introduced Mayer to an expanding fan base of teenage girls. But he discounts the idea that fans see him as a heartthrob.

"There's nobody who would pay 40 or 50 bucks to stand and watch me play for two hours and cheer for the parts that you're supposed to," says Mayer, who plays the Tweeter Center Aug. 20. "The little girls do understand, because if they're watching me play and they're not bored—and at least they don't seem to be, they're there for the right reason.

"Hopefully these kids are growing up on good music, and I don't mean that to sound arrogant," he continues. "I'm not even talking about the way it gets pulled off. I'm talking about the components: of soloing, of an improv, of a groove, of a 6/8 beat. If I can help bring that music across to somebody who wouldn't normally have discovered it, it's beautiful."

Mayer has broadened those components on his follow-up studio album, Heavier Things, playing more electric guitar on tunes that lean toward the richly atmospheric and melancholic while retaining a sleek pop sensibility. "When it's simpler, it's just heavier for me," says Mayer, who injects three guitar solos on the CD, a modest number for someone who recently faced off with blues hero Buddy Guy. "I don't want to put out records that are self-indulgent. You want to find the right combination of things that interest people."

Of the current tour, he says, "There's not as much nervous energy, which is good, and a more mature feeling." Mayer promises more guitar playing and "a few more covers that I feel like I've been able to put my own stamp on"—as he has previously with songs by the Police and Vaughan.

"I still listen to Stevie Ray and Sting all the time, but with Dave Matthews, I've kind of tapered off," says Mayer, making reference to a comparison that dogged him early on. "But there are people who listened to my first record and tapered off. And maybe they'll come back at record three, four or five. I'll build a little house here, we'll play music, and anyone's invited. People will check in and out as time goes on. That's the best part. That's a career." iB plays at the Tweeter Center Aug. 20.

John Mayer

Shaken, Not Stirred

Art deco comes to the MFA.

Tamara de Lempicka's Young Woman in Green (Jeune fille en vert) displays at the MFA.

Ever sipped a martini and let your mind wander back to an era when cocktail hour lasted until 9, swing music and saxophones were part of any "real" party, and the timeless little black dress first hit retail racks? Art Deco: 1910-1939, the latest large-scale exhibition to land at the Museum of Fine Arts, revisits the ultra-luxe style of the age of Gatsby.

Now in the last leg of an international tour, the exhibition, which opens August 22, features 240 works—paintings, sculpture, fashions, photography and jewelry—that showcase art deco's mixture of vibrant color and geometric simplicity. The movement influenced everything from photography to home interiors to everyday objects like hubcaps. As the line between domestic design and industrial innovation blurred, streamlined forms and new materials like plastics were incorporated into such objects as pitchers and cigarette lighters, and sleek skyscrapers like Rockefeller Center and the Chrysler and Empire State buildings rose to show the style's influence.

"Even though the style is very familiar to most of us, I doubt that most people realize how eclectic and complex [art deco] was," says Tracey Albainy, the MFA's senior curator of decorative arts and sculpture, Art of Europe. "The objects define modernity in the early 20th century and capture the chic of the age."

Highlights of the exhibition include exquisite Cartier art deco jewelry, a vanity case in the form of an Egyptian sarcophagus, and a lacquered wood and silver-leaf bed shaped like a canoe, as well as original evening gowns by legendary designers Jeanne Lanvin and Coco Chanel.

In addition to showcasing all this art, the MFA further evokes the spirit of the time with martini and sidecar cocktail hours and live jazz performances every Thursday night and Sunday afternoon at the MFA's restaurant, Bravo.

Museum of Fine Arts, 465 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-267-9300). www.mfa.org. Aug. 22–Jan. 9, 2005. $22; students and seniors, $20; children, $7.50. —Alissa Gordon

Biking Moron

To the moron who almost ran me over on the sidewalk: Bicycles are moving vehicles and must be ridden on the street, not sidewalks. You even shouted an obscenity at me to get out of the way. You behaved like a real lady. I hope you fall into a pothole and get hit by a truck.

Secondly, to those who ride on the street: Rules of the road do apply to you; i.e., you must stop at red lights. I only wish I had had my German shepherd with me so I could have let him loose on you. Stay off the sidewalk!

We Met Between Sox Games

We were at Jillian's July 22 between games of the Red Sox doubleheader. I'd been at the day game with some coworkers and you were trying to get rid of your ticket for the night game. You were reading the IMPROPER and I told you about how I liked to read the Impersonals because I thought it was funny that people actually tried to find that person from a random chance meeting. Well, now I'm one of those people! I had such a good time talking with you, even though it was brief, and I really wish I had given you my number so we could continue talking. So I'm taking a chance! Drop me a line—maybe we can go to a game together?

Big Man Behind the Wheel

Route 128 North, Waltham stretch, 8 am, mid July: I was driving to work, minding my own business, stuck in the typical traffic that can erupt. This is to that guy who was in front of me. We were traveling at a snail's pace. You moved in front of me, I moved up slightly behind you, you stopped short, I stopped short. No harm, no foul. I did not mean it, and did not touch your car. Waved to say, "Sorry about that"—no obscene gesture—because I felt bad. Next thing I know, I am getting yelled at from your window and you flipped me off. No problem, I thought, I'll get out from behind you, and move into the "fast" lane. I passed on the left, afraid to look over when I saw you gesturing from the corner of my eye. I turned to look and what did you do? You spit on my car. I was stunned and shocked. So, I rolled my window down and said, "Do you feel like a big man now, Buddy?" You spit on my car again, spewed several expletives, and said, "Your problem is, you don't get laid." I laughed at that one—is that ALL you could come up with?—I'm married and believe me, on my end, it's all good, Hon.

I laughed because apparently, road-raged, frustrated, not-very-good-looking, small-minded-big-mouthed guys in old, unattractive cars have nothing better to do than rage at innocent people who are just trying to get to work. Next time you want to spit on someone's car because they dared come near your car, think about your mom, or wife or daughter...how would you feel if someone spit on their car?

ArtBeat, Davis Square

The evening of July 16: You were on your way home (from work?) with two bags of groceries. We spoke briefly at the entrance to the park and you said you were going to drop off your things and return. I'm sorry I didn't run into you again later that evening, or the next day. You're obviously bright, attractive and personable, and I'd like to find out more about you.

—ingplace@yahoo.com

Eddie Bauer, July 14

You: Young, petite Asian woman looking a little frustrated. Me: Young, full figured black woman, browsing the T-shirt section. I just want to say thank you. I do not know why you picked me out of the handful of other shoppers that evening, but you made my week. Sorry I looked at you so suspiciously, but "random acts of kindness" are not an everyday occurrence in my life, so I was skeptical and wondering what the catch was going to be. Thank you so very much for being so generous. I pray that good karma surrounds you for an eternity.

—Marci M.

Grateful Neighbor

To my quick-thinking and caring neighbors in Jamaica Plain, thank you. I am so grateful to all the wonderful strangers who ran to help me when my bike caught in a trolley track at the corner of South and Jamaica streets July 6. Bleeding and bruised in the middle of rush hour traffic, I was terrified and in a lot of pain. But thanks to you—especially the off-duty paramedic and the woman who called 911 on her cell phone—I'm still here, in one piece. I feel extremely fortunate to live in such an amazing community of people who look out for each other. From the bottom of my heart, thank you.

Smile Again

On the Green Line our eyes met and we smiled. I tried to steal another look at you and caught you catching me. I couldn't help but blush and smile and feel a kind of rush. I know you somehow felt the same because just before you stepped off the T at Coolidge Corner you turned to smile at me and nod and then turned again to smile through the closed door. Let's smile again over something as simple as ice cream on a summer afternoon.

Girl in the Green T-shir

I first saw you at Newbury Comics on the afternoon of July 25, but we didn talk until we were both at the T waiting for the train. I had on black shoes, a white bucket hat, blue jeans a blue jacket and a gray T-shirt. I go to sit next to you before you got off Boylston. I wished we got to talk more. I think you're attractive, and you want to talk, e-mail me.

Subway Guy at the Purple Shamrock

You were tall, with light, brownish hair, blue eyes, an adorable boyish smile and a really nice body, out at t Purple Shamrock. You mentioned th you owned a couple of Subway sandwich stores, but I couldn't remember which ones or I would ha contacted you! I was the girl who wa born in Spain (but has lived here sin I was 6)—long, dark hair with the "most beautiful brown eyes you hav every seen" (your words, not mine). went to the bathroom with my frien and on the way we ran into her ex w his new girlfriend. Drama ensued an needless to say, I got dragged out without the chance to say goodbye give you my number. I would definit love some more of those soft, sexy kisses. I usually don't kiss strangers bars, but the chemistry was amazin If you would like to take me to that restaurant you were telling me abou e-mail me. Tell me your first and middle name so I know it's you.

Boat Cruise, July 31

Hey, big hunky guy: You thought were so macho coming off the boa yelling at the guy half your size behind you. And you must have thought you were Joe Cool telling him you were a "cop" and threatening to beat him up. Belie me, Sam, you have an anger management problem and you're lucky you weren't arrested. I doub that you read the IMPROPER, but if have any friends maybe one of th will read this to you.

rockie horoscope

UGUST 11 – 24, 2004

EO JULY 23–AUGUST 22

sisting on "my way or the highway" tactics (no matter whether you're right or ultimately oven wrong) can pay off around the 11th, as the Leo sun aligns with obstinate Pluto in gittarius, a hopeful, high-spirited fire sign like your own. You'll be able to display greater thenticity and authority than you (or your partner) imagined because now you can tap o hidden sources of the kind of power that secretive Pluto provides. Some of it is purely tual, some of it your life-or-death instinct at work. Trying to get pregnant?

IRGO

UGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

ok for a chance to grow at the expense of someone from ur past when ethical, enthusiastic Jupiter in your sign is allenged by manipulative Pluto in your Sagittarius nadir. haps the situation won't be as dastardly or dramatic as that; maybe it'll simply be a problem with the plumbing something else at home that is not immediately parent. As long as you're in such an expansive frame of nd, you might as well go after the goodies you truly want. the research, but don't make any major expenditures ile your Mercury ruler is retrograde.

IBRA

PTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

rking women, domestic goddesses and artists in various dia can weave a magical spell over your career now. Be e to those who are in a position to make you feel more ure about your place in the world. While your Venus ruler ts your Cancer midheaven—until Labor Day—family, inism and the promise of fame can spur you on to greater ghts. If it's important that you achieve at least one of your ls, know that despite delays and Mercury retrograde, this ne month to try. Friends or an organization may play an iliary role, but don't count on them to grease your way.

CORPIO

TOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

patience to follow through, to pay attention to the llest detail, is available if you need it. And before mn begins you probably will. Thank your Mars co-ruler finally getting to Virgo, the sign that actually enjoys king things as good as they can get. And while perfection ot your usual cup of tea, achieving your goal, by any ns necessary, is. Because Mars teams up with Mercury Jupiter, the planets that govern publicity and the dia, you're likely to appear smarter or hipper than you ly are. Fun for some.

AGITTARIUS

OVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

the next 10 days, it should be easy to do something ficult. If you've been fearful about making a crucial nge, now, while the life-affirming sun favors anal- ntive Pluto in Sag, would be the time to start. Pluto is a erful energy; it represents the disease and the cure, e and recovery, and other heavy-duty things we'd er not think about. But while the force is with you, it ld be sheer folly (a Sagittarius trait, for sure) to ignore ther people's resources are available for the asking.

APRICORN

CEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Idn't you know it? It's August—vacation time for the ks—and your unconscious is lit up like the sky during Perseids meteor showers. One revelation about the past another, plus a spiritual epiphany to blow your mind! pportunistic sextile between prescient Jupiter and your stic Saturn ruler next week favors good judgment and range planning for success. It's also the first supportive ment these giants have made since their conjunction in s in May 2000. Think back: what has changed?

QUARIUS

UARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

're feeling at all uncomfortable about a casual dship or your affiliation with an organization, now would good time to deal with it. Sunny Leo energy tends to emphasize the upside of relationships; it's also more forgiving than most signs. And while affectionate Venus trines your Uranus ruler midmonth, any change of heart would have a positive effect on you, personally. The Leo new moon on the 15th in your house of partners can inaugurate a new, more generous way of interacting with allies and antagonists alike.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Mercury retrograde in your Virgo partnership house, from August 9 to September 2, suggests that you be very careful dealing with significant others. Don't overlook the smallest detail of any agreement you may be considering, and double-check all information you receive. This includes casual conversations with your mate. Misunderstandings galore! Also, not seeing the forest for the trees tends to happen while Mercury is busy critiquing the small stuff. Better to table discussions entirely and opt for fun and frolic instead.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Your approach to problems and pleasures alike may change dramatically after your Mars ruler leaves enthusiastic Leo on the 10th and settles into detail-oriented Virgo for the next seven weeks. Productivity becomes as desirable an end as creativity, and being accurate may prove just as satisfying as being praised. Rams born in mid April can have it all—the love, the learning and the luck—when the fiery Leo sun and powerful Pluto in Sag support your natal Aries planets. Meanwhile, slow down, because Mercury is backsliding through your house of romance and recreation.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Finally, your Venus ruler leaves dualistic Gemini, where it's been flitting about since April 3, and enters down-home Cancer. Emotional security—and the other kind too—becomes more important, although you shouldn't be afraid to take a chance that could pop up as the week progresses. Although it might not be apparent, when it comes to romance and games of chance, you can be quite lucky right now. Don't let your reluctance to change keep you from capitalizing on Jupiter's expansive good fortune while you still can. Come fall, it'll be gone.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

It's mainly mid-June Gemini natives who are caught in the middle of the power struggle between righteous Jupiter in your Virgo home base and suspicious Pluto in your Sagittarius house of partners. A philosophical tug-of-war can be confusing and exhausting, especially since your Mercury ruler, retrograde in cautious Virgo, is in no position to help you sort through the information you're receiving. Not until Mercury goes direct on September 2 will you begin to see the entire picture, so try to postpone important decisions until then.

CANCER

Flirt away. Having magnetic Venus in your sign (but only until Labor Day) will draw attention to how good you look and make you quite popular with both genders. Although some folks might be impressed by the savvy way you wheel and deal, you'll tend to favor the humanitarians, eccentrics and independent thinkers who want to introduce you to something new. Meanwhile financial matters might not go smoothly while Mercury is retrograde in your house of income and assets. Not the time to ask for a raise.

Where do you take us? Send us a picture of you or a friend, or better yet, someone famous reading THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and tell us where you were. The wilder your destination and the more creative your photo, the better your chances of making the cut in the esteemed Improper Sightings.

Pete Lescoe, Dan Leonardo and Tom Maher ride the London Eye, which allows riders to see all of London and has proven much more popular than the conceptually similar London Nose.

Heidi Satz sent this picture of the Ottawa Hash House Harriers getting ready for their annual Red Dress Dun outside of the Rideau Curling Club in Ottawa, Ontario. You don't even want to know what was going on inside the curling club.

Larry King reads the IMPROPER avidly, because we're just so live. And we're big suspenders fans too.

Christine Anos, Emily Saperia, Renata Roskopf and Julia Finnegan are embarrassed for this naked statue man in Magog, Quebec. Because not only is he naked, he's really whittle.

Barbara and Jim Conen pose in front of a lava river left by the eruption of Mount Etna in Sicily. Mount Etna erupted in 1993 after pranksters filled it with baking soda and vinegar.

Kelli Strieby and Michael Ivins bathe in a spring in Costa Rica, which was a lucky fin after the crapper in their RV backed up.

NOTES FROM A SMALL ISLAND...

It seems that throwing kick-ass parties has finally eclipsed whaling as Nantucket's biggest industry, judging by the A.J. Mleczko Charity on Ice Celebrity Hockey Game, which took place July 17 and raised funds for the island's municipal skating rink.

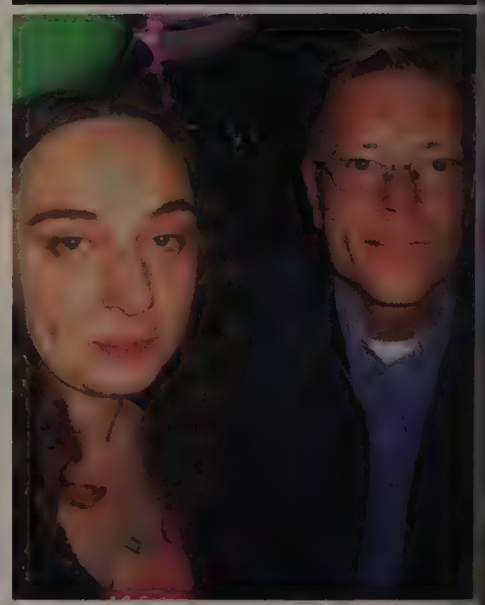
Named for and hosted by the Olympic women's hockey gold medalist (and lifelong Nantucketer), the game was part of a three-day extravaganza that began with drinks the night the guests arrived, continued with hangovers nursed by the pool of the Harbor House the next morning, and also included a round of golf, a fishing trip on which one of the celebrities saved an unlucky duckling from certain death, an over-the-top clambake with a ring-toss for vintage wines, and a live auction in which megabucks were bandied about.

Somewhere in the middle of all this the hockey game took place, and it proved to be both wildly entertaining and highly surreal. Spectators sporting deep tans, whale pants and Lily Pulitzer outfits arrived at Bovers Rink on the first real beach day the island had seen in weeks, and promptly began shivering as they sat down to watch the game. On the ice were such bold-faced names as Mleczko and her teammates Tricia Dunn and Colleen Coyne; 1980 men's hockey gold medalist Jim Craig; gazillionaire hockey nut George Gund; sports anchor Bob Lobel; WAAF morning mouths Greg Hill and former Bruin Lyndon Byers (the good Samaritan who had stopped a runty duck from getting pecked to death by a group of crazed waterfowl that morning); fellow hockey gods Rick Middleton, Ted Donato and Gord Kluzak; former Patriots giant Max Lane and actor/filmmaker John Shea, to name a few. In fact, the only no-show was John Kerry, who arrived on the island only hours before the game began and realized he had forgotten to pack his hockey gear, eventually bowing out by pleading exhaustion from the presidential campaign.

It's irrelevant who won, but what was significant (aside from the sheer oddity of watching a hockey game on Nantucket in mid July) was how civilized it was. As one spectator, noting the lack of fistfights, observed: "If a brawl did break out, they'd probably just hit each other over the head with cashmere sweaters."

A celebration at the Great Harbor Yacht Club followed, with plentiful food and drink and a guest list that included the likes of banking mack daddy Chad Gifford and his lovely wife, Anne; Mleczko's mother, Nantucket Ice president Bambi; Republican publican Tom Kershaw; studly private-jet guy John Jakes; and auto tycoons George Albrecht and Ernie Boch Jr., who bid so high and so often that one of the auctioneers actually said, "Take it easy, guys. You're upstaging me."

When the whole thing was over, the amount of money raised was so mind-boggling that a guest said, "That was excellent—there's nothing worse than doing an auction for a raffle crowd." Or, as someone else put it, "Now they can afford solid gold hockey sticks and Louis Vuitton gear bags for the players."



THERE'S SOMETHING TO BE SAID FOR HOLDING ONE'S TONGUE...

If the Art of July is any indication, a pool hall is the perfect place to throw a charity art auction. The annual fundraiser, held July 14 at The Rack, attracted an eclectic and interesting assortment of socialites and artists, hipsters, hippies, bigshots and bohemians, many of whom seemed flummoxed at finding themselves in a bar near Faneuil Hall.

By the time the bidding was done, th evening had raised beaucoup dinero for th Children's Trust Fund, and everyon seemed to be having a thoroughly exce lent time, including one guest wh bumped into an old acquaintance and lat said to a friend, "I wanted to ask, 'Didn we have sex once?' but some people migh take that the wrong way." iB

FALL FORECAST

Back in February, the IMPROPER's fashion editor, Samantha House, took a trip to New York to preview the fall 2004 collections, and in this issue she finally gets the chance to show our readers what she saw on the runways.

With assistance from lovely Elisabeth Hasselbeck, a Boston College alum and the newest face on ABC's The View, House highlights some of the most exciting looks for women this fall—from long, glamorous gowns to retro tweed suits. Meanwhile, men can take some fashion cues from KISS 108's Chris Shine, who also does model duty in this issue (leather trench coats, tweed jackets and striped suits are all the rage for guys this season). We round out our fashion preview with a look at stylish accessories—colorful watches, the return of the hat, and, for women, makeup tips from Emerson grad and cosmetics queen Bobbi Brown.

Finally, sticking with the prepping-for-fall theme, Ezra Dyer reports on the cars and trucks perfect for that ever popular college-town pastime: tailgating.

Read on and when the cool weather arrives, you'll be ready.

CREATURE COMFORTS

"Creatures of the Night" (Aug. 11) was a great piece. Brilliant perception. Funny and accurate. This is not the vague-eyebrows-and-hooded-sweatshirt caricature of a police sketch; this is the laser-accurate caption of countless nights spent in line for entry, drinks, glimpses, phone numbers. You've got Boston's personalities—and personality—wired, and you express what we all feel when we plan our nights, looking for specific types, hoping desperately to avoid specific others. Some of us seek barrooms where it looks like a 1998 Volkswagen ad has come to life and the crowd dresses as if the dot-com crash never happened. Some of us think nightlife begins and ends with an overmiked acoustic guitar and a Scorpion Bowl. We all know, by sight or by name, one living entry in each category. And though it may be caught-in-the-act, denial-laden disappointment to realize that our behavior places us in one of those categories, we also realize that while trends can be followed and fought, we in evening-time Boston have every opportunity to be "nightlife's type O." Great work.

—WHIT ALLEN

THE DINER THINGS IN LIFE

I enjoyed the Boston's Best issue (July 21), as always. But I have one amendment to suggest, regarding late-night dining. Under "Best Late-Night Food" you wrote that News is "unaccompanied in its hours except by a handful of Chinatown haunts." As an avid lover of South Street Diner's 4–5 am fare, stretching on into the wee hours of 6 and 7 am, when the construction workers, firemen and police come stomping in, and my date and I invariably crawl out, sleepy-eyed, to catch an early T home, I have to put in a plug for this fantastic old-style diner. Whether it's officially in Chinatown or the South End, it deserves high praise in its own right for some of the best burgers, omelets, French toast, and jukebox repertoire around. And it's never closed.

—KATHLEEN HALEY
Somerville

C'EST LA VIE

Your Boston's Best issue was quite a delight to read and certainly a helpful source of information. I feel snotty pointing out the misuse of French words or expressions, though you might want to know that most of the time "so French" customs have nothing to do with France. I particularly enjoyed neologisms such as "décolletage," an amusing mixture of "décolleté" and "cleavage," although I am afraid that, as with "sautéed," it is now an official American-French word.

Please don't get me wrong, I did appreciate the Boston's Best issue, and I also agreed with most of your picks. Yes, Boston is definitely much fun and a thrill.

—CEDRIC HUBEAU

THE NEW COLLECTION FOR FALL IS BIG AND BRILLIANT AND HERE AT in the pink. Think suede and tweeds to cashmere. Inspired by the classic Scottish Highlands, but designed with more fun, more color, more shape as only Lilly Pulitzer® can do it. Scrumptious sweaters and skirts, perfect coats and shirts. Scottie dog and horse prints to covet. Dreamy sleepwear too. The happiest fall ever starts now at in the pink.

DIRECT MARC-ETING

For those who like to shop—specifically for designer clothing—Marc Jacobs needs no introduction. But if fashion is an afterthought for you, think of him this way: Marc Jacobs is to clothing what Cadillac is to cars. And while lucky shoppers in New York and San Francisco have long had the luxury of browsing the racks at Marc Jacobs showrooms, the rest of us have had to settle for his abridged collection at Saks, Neiman Marcus and Bloomingdale's. Until now.

On August 12, Jacobs opened his sixth U.S. showroom, on Newbury Street. The boutique is Jacobs' first comprehensive all-brand store in the country and includes clothes, accessories and fragrances in both of the designer's eponymous labels (Marc Jacobs and the slightly more affordable Marc by Marc Jacobs). The upper level, which combines the luxurious and the classic with its streamlined white leather couches and white walls, features ready-to-wear (read: high-end) items. Jacobs' fall women's collection features ladylike pieces inspired by the 1940s: round-toe crocodile pumps, sequined blouses cinched with a velvet bow-tie belt, and pencil skirts, none of which are cheap (the crocodile pumps alone go for $3,050). Equally pricey menswear is available, as are luxurious home accents like mink throw pillows and cashmere blankets.

Downstairs at Marc by Marc Jacobs the vibe is more downtown and youthful, with rock music on the stereo, light blue walls and cluttery displays. "The idea here is maximal visual intake," says MJ spokesperson Kate Waters. "We want all the stock out on the floor." And if your shopping companion gets carried away browsing the shearling moleskin coats, candy-colored handbags and sparkly moccasins, you can entertain yourself at the clay play station in the back. Or register to vote. Stacks of voter registration forms accompany the Downtown for Democracy t-shirt display. 81 Newbury St., Boston (617-423-0707). —Jessica Iredale

TAXICAB LEFTOVERS

If there's anything worse than waking up Saturday morning with a headache the size of the Western Hemisphere, it's realizing that the wallet you last remember pulling out in the cab on the way home is no longer in your possession. After a couple of us experienced this trauma firsthand, we got curious about what else people are leaving behind these days and also how they can get stuff back. "Every single day, we get back a real lot of cell phones," says Laron Downs, a dispatcher with Boston Cab, "but we also get a lot of sunglasses, jewelry and a surprising number of single shoes." Other commonly lost items include baby strollers, umbrellas and cash. So where can all our one-shoed friends go to retrieve their things? Cab drivers bring items to the lost-and-found at the Boston Police Department's Hackney Division, at 1199 Tremont St. But not all items can be recovered. "The other day this guy called up saying that he left some weed in a cab," says Downs. "I don't think he'll be getting that back."

GARY GULMAN

In the end, Gary Gulman wasn't the Last Comic Standing. The hunky, Boston-bred comedian finished third on the show's August 12th series finale. But winning isn't everything. After working the local comedy circuit in relative obscurity for years, Gulman beat out thousands of struggling comics and seven of his nine LCS housemates, and in the process got the kind of publicity money can't buy. Next up is some serious touring, and season three of LCS (debuting August 30), in which the casts of the first two seasons compete against each other. We caught up with Gulman before he hit the road.

IB: What was your favorite part of the show?

GG: Getting to perform in front of all those people in a really nice theater. I mean, the crowds were really tremendous and energetic. They stood up. Standing ovations. I haven't gotten any of those in my career.

IB: Most painful or humiliating part?

GG: Having to dress up like that clown to entertain those kids.

IB: Who was the toughest audience?

GG: The judges at the roast. They were brutal.

IB: Who were you most happy to see get the boot?

GG: Probably ANT because I beat him, but he was actually pretty entertaining.

IB: Do you think you'll keep in touch with anyone from the show?

GG: I'm also going to be part of Last Comic Standing Three. So I'll be working with them for the fall. I became friends with John Heffron and Todd Glass, and I was already friendly with Alonzo.

IB: What's going on with Last Comic Standing Three*?*

GG: It's House One vs. House Two. They don't really have that much of a plan for it, but we're all under contract and it's definitely happening.

IB: What's your favorite comedy club or place to perform in Boston?

GG: The Comedy Studio in Harvard Square. I work out all my new jokes there.

IB: How did you get into comedy? Were you always a funny kid?

GG: I've always appreciated comedians. I don't know that I was always that funny, but I guess I always wanted to be funny and worked really hard at it. I mean, I always appreciated the comedians on Johnny Carson and Saturday Night Live and was always in awe of comedy, so I wanted to at least try it.

IB: What's your favorite bit?

GG: Right now my favorite bit—and I didn't do it on the TV show—is how I love grapes but hate grapefruit, and the story behind how they have such similar names but different tastes. It's a real important piece, I feel, politically and philisophically.

IB: Who are your favorite comedians, local and national?

GG: Locally, I would say Don Gavin, Paul D'Angelo and Tony V. Dane Cook nationally, and David Brenner. And I've always been a big Paul Reiser fan.

IB: Where do you go from here?

GG: I'm gonna be on the road every weekend until they stop giving me offers. And I'll be at the Comedy Connection the last weekend in October. —Jessica Iredale

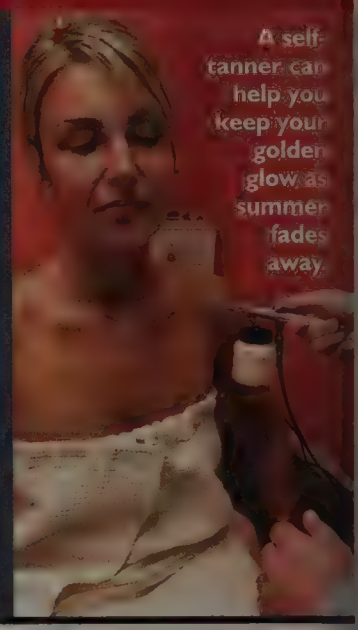
SUPER STEAK

Where's the Beef?... Historical landmarks and 14-ounce sirloins don't traditionally go hand in hand, but that's about to change. In the coming months, two of Boston's oldest and most historic sites will become homes to popular steakhouse chains. On September 20, New York–based Smith & Wollensky opens its doors at the old Armory building in Back Bay. The four-floor, 22,000-square-foot space will seat up to 425 beef buffs. Meanwhile, in early August, Ruth's Chris Steakhouse announced it had signed a lease for the site of Boston's Old City Hall (the former home of Maison Robert). Ruth's expects to open by the beginning of next year. www.smithandwollensky.com; www.ruthschris.com.

Triple the Fun... Nothing beats a trip to Mike's Pastry when you're craving sweets, but battling the cannoli-craving crowd isn't easy. If all goes as planned, however, the lines will be a thing of the past. "We're in the beginning stages of being approved to build up two stories on top of the space we have now," says owner Annette Mercogliano. "That will give us a lot more seating upstairs and also allow us to move back the counter space on the first floor." Needless to say, we're all for easy access to the holy cannoli.



Tantrastic... For years, Indian-food lovers have made the trek to Norwood's Jaipur Café, the acclaimed eatery of Shubhro and Mary Sen. But the duo has brought their talents a little closer to home (or at least closer to our home) with the opening of Tantric on Stuart Street (in the former site of Pho Pasteur). The Sens (along with partners Poonam and Mohinder Ahluwalia) have created a menu based on the philosophy of Tantra (spiritual awareness through invocation of the senses), with a range of gourmet delicacies and libations to stimulate all six senses. Which means (watch out!) lots of spices. 123 Stuart St., Boston (617-367-8742). www.tantricgrill.com.

International Square.... Davis Square's already diverse selection of dining options continues to expand with the opening of a Tibetan restaurant, Martsa on Elm, housed in the Savannah Grill's former digs. You'll find chef/owner Dechen Martsa, formerly of Harvard Square's Rising Moon, cooking lunch and dinner every day except Monday. 233-A Elm Street, Somerville (617-666-0660). —R.L. and Abby Bielagus

ENDLESS SUMMER

Inevitably, as summer winds down, so does the golden glow of your tan. I skip the lecture on the harmful effects of tanning—wrinkles, sunspots, cancer—you've heard it all before. Self-tanner is clearly a safer choice, so I searched out the premier products on the market and tried them all. My conclusions: Neutrogena Build-a-Tan ($9.99 at CVS) is the best for light complexions. It starts out faint, and you can reapply to achieve a medium glow without fear of turning orange. For darker complexions, St. Tropez Tinted Self Tanning Lotion ($33 at Sephora) rocks. After one application you're golden brown, and the color fades naturally. If you're on a bigger budget, check out Maksou Salon's Bronzing Body Treatment ($70, $35 for a touchup), which includes a full-body scrub and self-tanner application. All these treatments are safe and practically foolproof, but in my opinion, the best is Avanti Salon's airbrush treatment ($30 per session or $75 for three). Tanning expert Robin Erb sprays you from head to toe, and the result is a tan so perfect you'll look like you summered in St. Barths. www.sunless.com. —Samantha House

VEGETARIAN VARIETY

Whether you're a strict vegan or would simply like a scrumptuous, meat-free meal now and then, you can take advantage of the range of cuisine at local restaurants that offer vegan and vegetarian options.

Buddha's Delight

5 Beach St., Boston (617-451-2395); 404 Harvard St., Brookline (617-739-8830).

Buddha's is a vegan's paradise. Convincing meat substitutes are used in many dishes, such as vermicelli with "pork" ($8.35) and meatless "chicken fingers" ($5.80). Sister restaurant Buddha's Delight Too! in Brookline offers the same menu.

Sepal

17 Nichols Ave., Watertown (617-924-5753). www.sepalrestaurant.com.

Healthy-looking vegetarians flock to this Middle Eastern eatery known for its mouthwatering falafel and special sauce. Made with chick peas, eight fresh vegetables and herbs, the falafel sandwich costs $5.95.

Café Mosheh

499b Washington St., Dorchester (617-288-8813). www.cafemosheh.com.

Café Mosheh prides itself on its down-home "soul food" that's 100 percent vegan. Many a meat eater has been known to visit the café for the BBQ Tofu, the restaurant's meatless version of BBQ chicken ($6.50–$8.50). Vegans who miss mac and cheese will enjoy Mosheh's soy version of the treat. Check the Web site for a weekly menu.

Grasshopper

1 North Beacon St., Allston (617-254-8883).

Allston's all-vegan restaurant serves a range of Vietnamese, Chinese and Japanese cuisine. Begin a meal with spring rolls sprinkled with veggie fish sauce ($3), and continue with generously portioned entrées ranging in price from $6.50 to $9.50. Try the teacake, Grasshopper's nondairy cheesecake ($3.50), for dessert.

Veggie Planet at Club Passim

47 Palmer St., Cambridge (617-661-1513). www.veggieplanet.net.

This café next to the famed folk club offers a unique spin on vegetarian pizza with creations like the Portobello Redhead (seared portobellos topped with red-roasted-pepper almond sauce, browned onions and feta, $5.95) and the Blonde on Blonde (mozzarella, tofu ricotta, asiago and fried garlic, $5.95). There's also a selection of meat-free meals, salads and soups plus desserts made on the premises.

IMPROPER SPEAKING

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Start Beachin'... The Palace, which renovates its clubs about as frequently as Britney Spears goes through fiancées, recently transformed its Uptown room into the Beach House. There may be only a limited number of beach days left this year, but in sunny Saugus you can find palm trees, lounge chairs, a tiki bar and other trappings of summer. We count this as further evidence that someone needs to build an artificial tropical beach inside a giant dome somewhere on the North Shore. Till then, bring sunblock—and your imagination—to the Palace.

Going for Gold... If you like the comfy, minimalist furniture at Pottery Barn, Crate & Barrel and Restoration Hardware, you'll like furniture impressario Mitchell Gold's designs. The famed retailer/manufacturer, who supplies many of the pieces carried by those stores, is poised to open his second showroom (a huge 5,500-square-foot space) on Berkeley Street in September. While Gold is known for his hip designs, he's also known for his politics. During the DNC, the North Carolina delegate was spotted around Boston lobbying not only for gay rights, but also for the right to redecorate—1600 Pennsylvania Ave. specifically—if Kerry is elected. Should Kerry and Co. be in the position to commission a new look for the White House, they can look to Al and Tipper Gore for a testimonial—Gold recently revamped their Arlington, Va., estate. 142 Berkeley St., Boston (617-266-0075). www.mitchellgold.com.

Lights, Cameras, Action... With some of the biggest names in Tinseltown roaming around Boston during the Democratic National Convention, we all might have thought for a second that we were on a Hollywood set. Or at least in New York. But even with the stars having returned home, Boston's film scene is booming. Freedom Park, a movie shot in Central Mass. about two men attempting to pay off a gambling debt by wagering on Little League games, is set to open in theaters in Belmont, West Newton and Amesbury September 10. Local filmmakers also have a knack for suspense. Starting in late August, Arlington's Regent Theatre will screen the premiere of The Killing Hand, about a band of thieves who conspire to take over the streets of Lowell (where the film was shot). Finally, this fall, Road Rambler Films is set to begin shooting Streets Players, a story about a Boston man who wages a war of vengeance on the local mob.

BEGINNING OF THE LEGEND

All of this is true, because e-mail wouldn't lie.

I want to start my own urban legend e-mail service. People are always sending me bunk messages, and I used to take the time to write back and explain that President Bush didn't wave to Stevie Wonder to get his attention, or that the photo of North America during the blackout just might be Photoshopped. But I think it's time to go on the offensive, so if you could do me a favor, type up one of the following stories and send it to everyone you know. If you do, you'll get a $200 check in the mail from the IMPROPER's new e-mail tracking program. Really, it worked for a guy I know.

FWD: Urgent virus alert message

Guys, if someone sends you an e-mail with an attachment that says "MonkeysHaving Sex.qpgxhg," DON'T OPEN IT, no matter how intriguing that sounds. Opening this file will cause your hard drive to explode, sending shrapnel out through your monitor straight into your face. If you open that e-mail, Bill Gates will come right to your house and kick you in the nuts before setting fire to your computer. I have a friend who opened it, and her computer stole her identity and bought $3,000 worth of jewelry at Wal-Mart. Now her computer wears all these gaudy gold-plated chains with initials pendants spelling out "iMacDaddy," and when my friend tries to take them off to return them, her computer flashes a message threatening to e-mail her address book to Al Qaeda. Just because you haven't heard about this virus from anyone else, or seen anything about it on the news, doesn't mean it's not for real.

FWD: FWD: Don't flash your lights!

If you see a car driving at you with its lights off at night, don't flash your lights at them, as a sick trend is sweeping the nation. The first car that flashes its lights is followed home, where the unfortunate driver is made to listen to "Get Down on It," "Jungle Boogie" and even "Celebration" until they fall asleep with one of those songs stuck in their head. This is a Kool and the Gang initiation ritual.

FWD: FWD: KFC's disgusting secret

I have a friend who works for the government, and he told me that Kentucky Fried Chicken isn't allowed to use that name anymore and had to change its name to KFC because—get this—many of its locations aren't even in Kentucky. I'm not sure I even want to eat there anymore knowing that.

FWD: FWD: FWD: FWD: FWD: Disturbing new study

I have a cousin who does research at the University of Texas, and he told me to forward the results of a recent study to everybody I know who follows baseball, as it could help prevent a very serious medical condition. In a nutshell, 99 percent of the study's participants suffered serious ocular degeneration and acute palmar follicle stimulation (vision loss and hairy palms) from rooting for Roger Clemens.

FWD: FWD: FWD: FWD: Important info for bird lovers

Don't throw rice at your wedding, because birds might eat it and explode. Not literally, of course, but from all the carbs.

FWD: FWD: Little-known facts

If you drive through the FastLane in reverse, it actually credits the toll back into your account. Snapple Pink Lemonade originally had angel dust in the formula The Custom House is a spaceship that wil bring Mayor Menino to the moon in th event of a nuclear attack. Mike Tyson i Mikey from the Life cereal ads. Paul Re vere was really a woman named Paula, bu she had to pose as a man because bacl then women weren't allowed to go o midnight rides. Mentadent toothpaste i kept in separate sides of the container be cause the two flavors become explosive i not mixed with water within 30 seconds Roy's dry cleaner is going to be featured o America's Most Wanted because police dis covered that he sewed a piece of gazell meat into the ruffles of Roy's blouse. THE COLLINS CARD

BY CHRIS COLLINS

JERRY SPRINGER COMES TO FENWAY?

Around Yawkey Way, baseball has taken a backseat to the off-field drama.

Let's face some facts. The Boston Red Sox were five outs from beating the New York Yankees and getting to the World Series. I don't know about you, but to me, that's close. So I ask you: Was it necessary to interrupt the Red Sox season for a month of Jerry Springer episodes?

Or maybe it's the latest edition of Girls Gone Wild. Only in the Red Sox version, it's the team's front office showing their collective behinds. And just like those Girls tapes, they don't appear to be the least bit embarrassed by the whole debacle.

The trading of an icon as big as Nomar Garciaparra is never an easy thing, but sometimes it just has to happen. We can all probably agree that Red Sox general manager Theo Epstein did what he had to do.

But where did it all go wrong? If you're looking to place blame with the young general manager, don't. I'd look over his head at the owners (and president). Or should we call them the bumblers and plotters?

Over the last six months there have been instances where the Red Sox have tried to make things right. They've been unsuccessful. But why were things so wrong in the first place? A source close to the ordeal tells me that a big moment in the breakup came upon Nomar's return from his honeymoon this past off-season.

He got off the plane in Los Angeles and immediately called Sox owner Tom Werner to ask about where the team was with the Alex Rodriguez negotiations. Werner invited Nomar over to his Southern California mansion the next day to assure him that the A-Rod thing was dead and all their time and energy would be focused on keeping Nomar with the Sox. Days later Garciaparra got a phone call telling him that Sox CEO and president Larry Lucchino and Epstein were on their way to Texas to meet with A-Rod.

Nomar and his agent, Arn Tellum, apparently called the duo as Lucchino and Epstein were on their way to do the Texas two-step and pursue the A-Rod deal again. That conversation reportedly ended with Lucchino saying "(Bleep) you Arn, (bleep) you!"

That's the way Lucchino does business. Nobody can question his intellect: He's become a rich man in baseball management. But let's be honest: His temper played a huge role in the Sox' failure to land Rodriguez, and his lack of candor played a significant role in Nomar's reluctance to stay in Boston.

Lucchino is the president and CEO, so he's certainly within his rights to do as he feels. But at what cost? Is Pedro Martinez's reputation next up on the chopping block? Will the Sox secretly start leaking information about his attitude, his punctuality, or the Bill James Pitch Count Reduction theory? And why doesn't principal owner John Henry get more involved?

Nomar told me that from the long, winter courtship of A-Rod until spring training, the number of conversations he had with John Henry was the same as Robert Parish's old jersey digits: double zero. So with that, a superstar walks to the Windy City. If you're a Red Sox fan, it feels worse than Nomar's Achilles tendinitis.

Nomar isn't without fault here and didn't always help his own cause. Quiet by nature, he didn't like dealing with the media. And everybody would have liked to see him pinch hit in that extra-innings affair with the Yankees. But he was still respected in the clubhouse and idolized in the stands.

It's times like these that make you wonder how another deposed Red Sox employee, Grady Little, would have handled this. Would he or could he have made a difference? Questionable on-field decisions aside, Little was a master at finding the chemistry in the clubhouse.

> IT'S POPULAR TO BASH THE GUY THAT EVERYBODY USED TO CHEER FOR, BUT OVERALL, NOMAR WASN'T THE PROBLEM

It's become popular to bash the guy that everybody used to cheer for as if he were paying their mortgage, but overall, Nomar wasn't the problem. He tried to fix his fractured relationship with management in the only manner he knew, by going out and playing the game hard. That's what he did for eight years in Boston. I think he would prefer you just say thank you and think ahead to the World Series, where Nomar, Theo, Larry, Henry and everybody involved with this mess would love to reunite.

If that were to happen sometime in late October, a year's worth of Jerry Springer episodes wouldn't be able to touch it. IB

Elisabeth Filarski Hasselbeck is the youngest co-host of the popular daytime talk show The View and host of the Style Network's The Look for Less, which helps viewers find designer clothes on the cheap. She was born and raised in Providence, R.I., the daughter of an architect father and attorney mother. After graduating from St. Mary Academy-Bay View in East Providence, she studied fine art at Boston College, where she captained the Division I softball team to back-to-back Big East championships in 1997 and 1998. In 1997 she traveled to Belize to teach, and after receiving her degree in 1999, she designed shoes for Puma while living in Boston. Hasselbeck came to national prominence as a contestant on the second season of CBS's Survivor and has hosted programs on MTV and appeared as a guest on Late Show with David Letterman, The Tonight Show with Jay Leno, The Rosie O'Donnell Show and Rock & Roll Jeopardy. A dedicated runner, she has completed the Boston Marathon and spends her spare time painting and developing her own line of accessories. She is also an active supporter of the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation, the Making Memories Foundation, Habitat for Humanity, the World Scholar-Athlete Games, and the organization Knowledge Now. A recent recipient of a Distinguished Alumni award from Boston College, she is married to Washington Redskins quarterback Tim Hasselbeck, her college sweetheart. The couple lives in New York City.

Jonathan Soroff: As one of the first reality TV stars, aren't you just a little bit sick of the whole thing?

Elisabeth Hasselbeck: You know, I'm actually kinda hooked. Everybody, if they're being honest, knows there's at least two reality shows they like. But I'll admit we're a little oversaturated.

JS: You parlayed your 15 minutes of fame into a pretty good gig. Any advice for someone contemplating doing reality TV?

EH: Just know what you're getting into.

JS: Think they'll ever introduce cannibalism on Survivor, just to spice things up a bit?

EH: I wouldn't doubt it. I think Mark Burnett actually likes the taste of human flesh.

JS: Richard Hatch. Is he as much of an ass as he seems?

EH: He was really nice to me the last time we had an encounter. Prior to that, we had our little tiffs. But I don't really know him.

JS: Very diplomatic. So what would you have done with the million dollars?

EH: Probably gone on a really long vacation with a lot of food.

JS: Best thing about going to college in Newton?

EH: Definitely J.P. Licks ice cream.

JS: Who's the biggest diva on The View?

EH: Probably me. I'm the new kid, asking all these questions, needing to know where things are…

JS: So you're the little problem child? Remember what happened to Debbie Matenopoulos! How about your most embarrassing moment on the show?

EH: That might've been yesterday, when I decided to bust out in the Chicken Dance.

JS: Ouch.

EH: Yeah. Especially since it was during a segment on erotic dance. It just didn't seem to fit.

JS: There's an awful lot of estrogen on that show. Don't you ever crave a little male companionship?

EH: All the time. That's why we have a lot of male guests. Haven't you noticed?

JS: I have. What happens when you're all premenstrual at the same time?

EH: It's probably happened, because we work together and we're on the same cycle, I would guess. That would make for a really bad day for the guests, I would assume.

JS: Like General Tommy Franks. You guys lit into him like a stoner ripping into a bag of Doritos.

EH: [Laughs.] Poor General Tommy Franks. I was on his side.

JS: How about a guest you found really intimidating?

EH: Probably Bill O'Reilly. Not that I was scared of him, but it was early on, and I was still getting my feet wet, and I'd seen him get really mad on his own show, so I was thinking, "Oooh. This might turn into The O'Reilly Factor." I knew he might get set off by something we'd say.

JS: Best perk of the job?

EH: Getting paid to blab.

JS: Ever asked Barbara Walters to say "rascally rabbit?"

EH: Uh…no.

JS: Would you? On a dare?

EH: No.

JS: OK, tell me a secret about her.

EH: One of the sweetest women I've ever met. She gave me a big hug today. She takes good care of everyone.

JS: How about Joy Behar. Doesn't her voice ever get to you?

EH: No, but she nearly has me wetting my pants every single morning.

JS: Star Jones is scary, isn't she?

EH: No. She's an incredible person, and she's always got my back.

JS: You'd never cross her, though, would you?

EH: [Laughs.] Star's totally in love.

JS: Yeah, with herself.

EH: No. She's madly in love with her fiancé, and she has a very endearing, soft side that you see when she has a guest on she likes, or she's talking about her weekend. But she's sharp and intelligent, and you can't pull the wool over her eyes.

JS: OK, let's talk about Meredith Vieira for a second. She's not as sweet as she seems, is she?

muse
BE COURAGEOUS AND REAP STYLE REWARDS BY PAIRING FLIRTY AND FUN PIECES LIKE CROPPED JACKETS AND SWING COATS IN VARYING TEXTURES.

EH: She's the coolest Mom in the whole world.

JS: But she's got a dark side, right? She's running an S&M dungeon on the side, or something.

EH: [Laughs.] She so is not.

JS: I gather you're not gonna dish on your co-hosts. So name one fashion trend you're sick of.

EH: Oh, God. There are so many. I can't take any more of that bohemian look. Too much '70s boho. I just can't take it. I feel like it should smell like hemp and weed every time I see it.

JS: I'm wearing a hemp shirt as we speak.

EH: Well, I'm glad I'm in New York and you're in Boston.

JS: Touché. OK, finish this sentence: _____ is the new black.

EH: Mocha.

JS: I'll run right out and buy some. Best place to find a bargain?

EH: Oooh, good question. Vintage. Or Filene's Basement, for sure, but you'd better be willing to fight for it.

JS: Fashion faux pas you see most often?

EH: Hmm…Let me try to narrow it down. Over-tucking. Sometimes people tuck in their shirt and they really shouldn't.

JS: You're married to a big NFL star. Who gets asked for more autographs?

EH: Tim, by far.

JS: When you're alone together at home, do you ever have arguments over who's more famous?

EH: [Laughs.] Umm…no.

JS: You hesitated! I think you're lying! I bet you're like, "I'm more famous. Now, give me the remote control!"

EH: [Laughs.] Oh, my gosh, that's so like…no way.

JS: Speaking of which—creepiest fan encounter?

EH: Haven't had one yet. Hope not to.

JS: As the youngest host on The View, do you ever play the age card, like, "You wouldn't understand. It's a 20s thing," or "Aren't you a bit old to be wearing that?"

EH: That wouldn't be wise.

JS: So that's what happened to Debbie Matenopoulos and Lisa Ling?

EH: I tend not to ask about the past.

JS: One thing you'd never say on air?

EH: I think I'd pretty much say anything.

JS: One thing you'd never wear on air?

EH: A miniskirt with ankle boots. [Laughs.]

JS: One thing you'd never do on air?

EH: Oh, lots of things. Like the Chicken Dance incident—the reason I did that is I didn't want to dirty-dance with another man. I was supposed to be doing a cowgirl twirl around some boy, and I decided that wasn't in my comfort zone, so I busted out with the Chicken Dance.

JS: Biggest beauty secret?

EH: Water.

JS: Your hair color: real or bottled?

EH: Oh, bottled, baby. I'm a brunette, through and through. It's all about the highlights.

JS: Highlights?! You're completely blond!

EH: That's right. Solid blond highlights.

JS: One thing people would be shocked and scandalized to learn about you?

EH: Oh, gosh. I have a serious addiction to chewing gum.

JS: Where do you stick it when you go on air?

EH: Usually in my prep notes or on Joy's seat.

JS: She must enjoy that. Current favorite reality show?

EH: The Apprentice.

JS: I knew you'd say that. I'm psychic!

EH: But I also really like Newlyweds.

JS: Ugh! Jessica Simpson is just so insipid.

EH: I think she's brighter than people think.

JS: Oh, I don't think she's stupid. That's an act. She's just annoying.

EH: We had her on the show today, and she's got a wit about her. She gets it. She's probably sharper than I am.

JS: Think she's smarter than Anna Nicole Smith?

EH: Well, I mean…I don't think you can compare the two.

JS: OK, that little dog is smarter than Anna Nicole Smith. Let's say she and Paris Hilton got into a catfight. Who would win?

EH: [Long pause.] I'm just envisioning it. [Laughs.] Paris Hilton, because she'd buy her way out of it.

JS: It always comes down to money. Last question: If you had to do Survivor over again, what would you do differently?

EH: I'd win.

HEADS UP

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE PHOTOGRAPH BY TRACY POWELL

Hats are an essential wardrobe element for much of the year in blustery Boston. Until now, all you really needed was something stretchy and serviceable, but the trend this season is moving toward old-fashioned elegance. Think 1930s and '40s vintage looks instead of sporty. Hats are no longer just for keeping your top toasty; they're meant to become part of your ensemble, and you'll want to be seen in them. (There'll be no tossing your topper aside after you walk through the door.) To update your wardrobe and add new life to your winter coat, pick up a few in a variety of colors. Try Toppers for a beautiful selection at reasonable prices, or go to www.galvinizedhats.com for handmade originals by local designer Marie Galvin.

BEAUTY QUEEN

BY SAMANTHA HOU
PHOTOGRAPH BY OLIVIA GA

Makeup maven Bobbi Brown began her career in Boston, studying theatrical makeup at Emerson College. After graduating, she went on to create 10 brown-based lipsticks that sold out in record time at Bergdorf Goodman in New York City, and since then she's expanded her cosmetics line to include shadows, foundations and anything else women could possibly need for primping purposes. Now, a makeup artist to stars ranging from Faye Dunaway to Sandra Bullock to Alicia Silverstone, Brown has earned recognition as a beauty icon. We sat down with her to discuss trends for fall, her own makeup disasters, her favorite products and more.

Samantha House: What's your favorite makeup look for yourself?
Bobbi Brown: One that makes me look pretty, fresh and tan.
SH: Have you ever had a makeup disaster?
BB: It's happened to me many many times. I just shot somethin for Architectural Digest, and I realized that I had no makeup wi me. I found a blush and mascara, so I used the blush on m cheeks and lips and put some mascara on as well. I looked ve natural in the photograph.
SH: What are two tricks that only makeup artists know?
BB: Use the warmth of your fingers to apply foundation a concealer; blend your concealer with your finger and apply patting it—not rubbing it.
SH: How should a woman's makeup routine change as she ages?
BB: Every woman needs to be open to changing styles. I thi women need more makeup as they get older to keep the looking like they aren't wearing any.
SH: What's the biggest makeup trend for this fall?
BB: Stain-pressed lips, windburned-looking cheeks and natu but defined eyes.
SH: What's your favorite item in your fall lineup?
BB: We did a palette based on ski slopes. I was inspired whe went to Colorado. I saw how beautiful everyone looked w their flushed cheeks and burnt lips. So the Ski Slopes Co Pallette for the Face and my new fragrance, Baby.
SH: What's your favorite product of all time?
BB: The creamy concealer kit, which is a concealer and pow in one. It's great for touch-ups.
SH: If you were trapped on a desert island, what one product would you want with you?
BB: If there were no mirror, I'd bring a fragrance. If there w a mirror, I'd bring Extra SPF 25 Tinted Moisturizing Ba because it's a moisturizer, makeup and sunscreen in one.

2005 HUMMER H2 SUT

Base price: $52,845

Available: Now

Tailgating Touchdowns: 110-volt power outlet; heated seats in case you're soft and want to go inside; XM radio to kick the jams; ability to tow largest of pig-smokers.

Tailgating Fumbles: If you leave it running, you'll need your own oil well; swing-out spare tire and massive width demand a mungo parking space.

open the GATES!

BY EZRA DYER

ootball season is upon us, and with it comes a tradition every bit as vital to the game as goalposts and early-retiring ganja-smoking running backs: tailgating. Since this is also the time of year when new car models hit the streets, here's a look at four of the hottest that pack a tailgate, and the places to take them for your pre-pigskin parking lot party. Fire up the grill!

HARVARD
Hummer H2 SUT

The Hummer H2 SUT, the pickup-truck version of the H2, was clearly designed with tailgating in mind, because that's about all you can do with its dinky, 35-inch-long bed. But what a tailgating platform it is: The SUT features not one, but two tailgates. The first is the traditional gate that folds down from the back and serves as a loading platform, seating surface or wet bar. The second, called the Midgate, folds forward from the front of the cargo box to expand the bed into the cabin. Open the cabin's rear doors and, voilà, you can tailgate out the sides. Like any good quasi-military vehicle, the H2 SUT protects its flanks.

So, where do you take this thing to get the party started? Anywhere you want. This is a Hummer. You could tailgate in the middle of a rushing river, in a jungle surrounded by tigers, or on top of a snow-covered mountain while playing volleyball with giant, bikini-clad women. (Wait a minute...we're confusing our unrealistic SUV marketing imagery with unrealistic light-beer marketing imagery.) But we recommend using the SUT to ambush a tailgating scene a little closer to home: Harvard.

We know what you're thinking: Won't Harvard kids protest the H2, with its petroleum-swilling 6-liter V-8 and styling clearly meant to evoke its big brother, the H1, which is frequently put to politically incorrect uses such as foreign invasions? No, because those kids don't go to football games. They'll be in their dorms writing manifestos while you enjoy the H2's commanding view of the field outside Harvard Stadium, where all the action happens. Other H2 attributes that'll improve your tailgating experience are optional XM satellite radio, heated front and rear seats, and the crowning touch, a 110-volt electrical outlet, so you can plug in a TV in case you're having so much fun that you miss the kickoff. Or the first half.

2006 LINCOLN MARK LT

Base price: $40,000+ (estimated)
Available: January 2005
Tailgating Touchdowns: Posh interior; 20-inch chrome wheels can be used as mirrors if you need to wipe mustard off your face; a tailgate lock (so nobody can steal your seat—literally).
Tailgating Fumbles: A 2006 model, it won't be available until the playoffs; Ford F150 owners might think you a dandy lad.

GILLETTE STADIUM

Lincoln Mark LT

Lincoln made a foray into the pickup market a few years back with the ill-conceived Blackwood, which featured a carpeted bed with fake African wenge wood adorning the side—it was ugly, but at least it wasn't very useful. The new Mark LT promises to add a dash of Lincoln bling to the pickup world while retaining real-truck practicality. It features a noncarpeted bed, available four-wheel-drive and the 300-horsepower, 5.4-liter V-8 from the Ford F-150, on which the LT is based.

You'll want to program Gillette Stadium into the Mark LT's navigation system, because the poshest of pickups needs to strut its stuff at the biggest parking lot bash in the state. The Mark LT's decked-out interior looks like it was lifted straight from the Navigator, and if you catch a chill before kickoff you can warm your buns on the heated leather seats. (Lincoln isn't confiming equipment yet, but we assume the LT will have the same swank options as Lincoln's other trucks.) You'll appreciate the comfy cabin even more when it's time to leave, since a stadium full of fans trying simultaneously to get out of Dodge creates hellacious gridlock around Foxboro. Get your seat adjusted and fire up the backseat DVD player—you're gonna be here a while. One other way in which the Mark LT jibes with Patriots tailgating is that it won't be available until January 2005, long before you'll reach the front of the waiting list for season tickets.

2005 MINI COOPER CONVERTIBLE

Base price: $22,000 (estimated)
Available: September
Tailgating Touchdowns: Tidy size means you can whip up a party just about anywhere; convertible top allows 'gaters to lounge up front without being antisocial; 176-pound tailgate capacity plenty for grilling.
Tailgating Fumbles: Backseat just about big enough for a bag or two of briquettes; potential to get stuck in soggy grass; 176-pound tailgate capacity not plenty for sitting.

NORTHEASTERN

Mini Cooper Convertible

Tailgates aren't just for trucks, mate. The new Mini Cooper convertible is the proud owner of what is likely the smallest tailgate in autodom, a by-product of its conversion from hatchback coupe to drop-top. Said tailgate may be small, but it's stout, supporting up to 176 pounds when it's flipped down—plenty enough for grilling. The roofless Mini offers the same engines as the coupe, which means a 115-horsepower four-cylinder, a supercharged 170-horse version of same, or a tricked out, 200-horsepower John Cooper Works version that will ensure you've got the speed (along with the diminutive size) to snatch up any parking space as soon as it opens.

Speaking of snatching up parking spaces, the Mini is just the thing for tailgating at Northeastern. Why? Because Northeastern doesn't have any room for proper tailgating. So you'll need to sneak in anywhere you can find a space—maybe there'll be a small patch of ground available on the lawn of the Phi Gamma Pi frat house, across the street from the Brookline High football field. (We hear they host a mean kegs 'n' eggs party.) If the weather's nice, you can either open the front section of the Mini's power-operated top to create a sort of gigantic sunroof, or peel the whole thing off to take the interior alfresco. The whole process takes only 15 seconds, which is handy given that autumn weather in New England can go from sun to downpour in roughly the same period. The Mini may not be the offensive lineman of tailgating vehicles, but sometimes the kicker is the most valuable guy on the team.

2005 LAND ROVER LR3

Base price: $44,995
Available: Fall 2004
Tailgating Touchdowns: Available 600-watt stereo to drown out annoying marching bands; seven-passenger seating to bring lots of friends; adjustable-height air suspension lets you get that tailgate level just right.
Tailgating Fumbles: Asymmetrical tailgate gives up crucial surface area in the name of style; much nicer than a Discovery, but Range Rover owners will still quietly mock you for being poor.

TUFTS

Land Rover LR3

The Land Rover Discovery, aka the Disco, has gone the way of disco itself for 2005, to be replaced by the slick new LR3. The LR3 aims to improve the Disco's on-road performance, which was even less of a hit than Rick Dees' "Dis-Gorilla." To that end, the LR3's air suspension, six-speed automatic transmission and 300-horsepower V-8 should be music to drivers' ears. Are you sick of our extended disco metaphor yet? Good, so are we. Let's talk about the tailgating goods.

We recommend you drive the LR3 to Tufts, where the mascot is Jumbo and so is the tailgating scene—relative to the size of the school, that is. The LR3 will fit right in, as Land Rovers go with expensive New England colleges like J. Crew roll-neck sweaters on pretty, liberal girls. Tufts allows tailgating (with or without a ticket to the game) in the parking lot next to the field, and booze is OK as long as you're not too blatant about it. As for the tailgate itself, the LR3 sports a stylish, asymmetrical little number that's best used as a grilling platform, since there's not much sitting room. However, there are skylights over the rear seat rows to shed a little light on your situation, and an optional 600-watt stereo system will drown out all those pesky people who actually came out to watch the game.

MOPSY

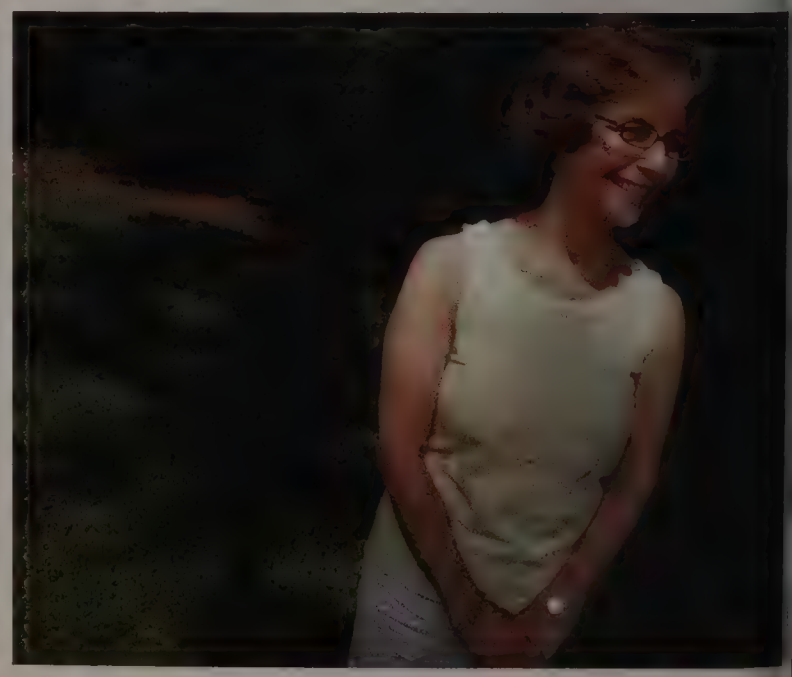
SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY

THE MANY TOWNS OF BOSTON

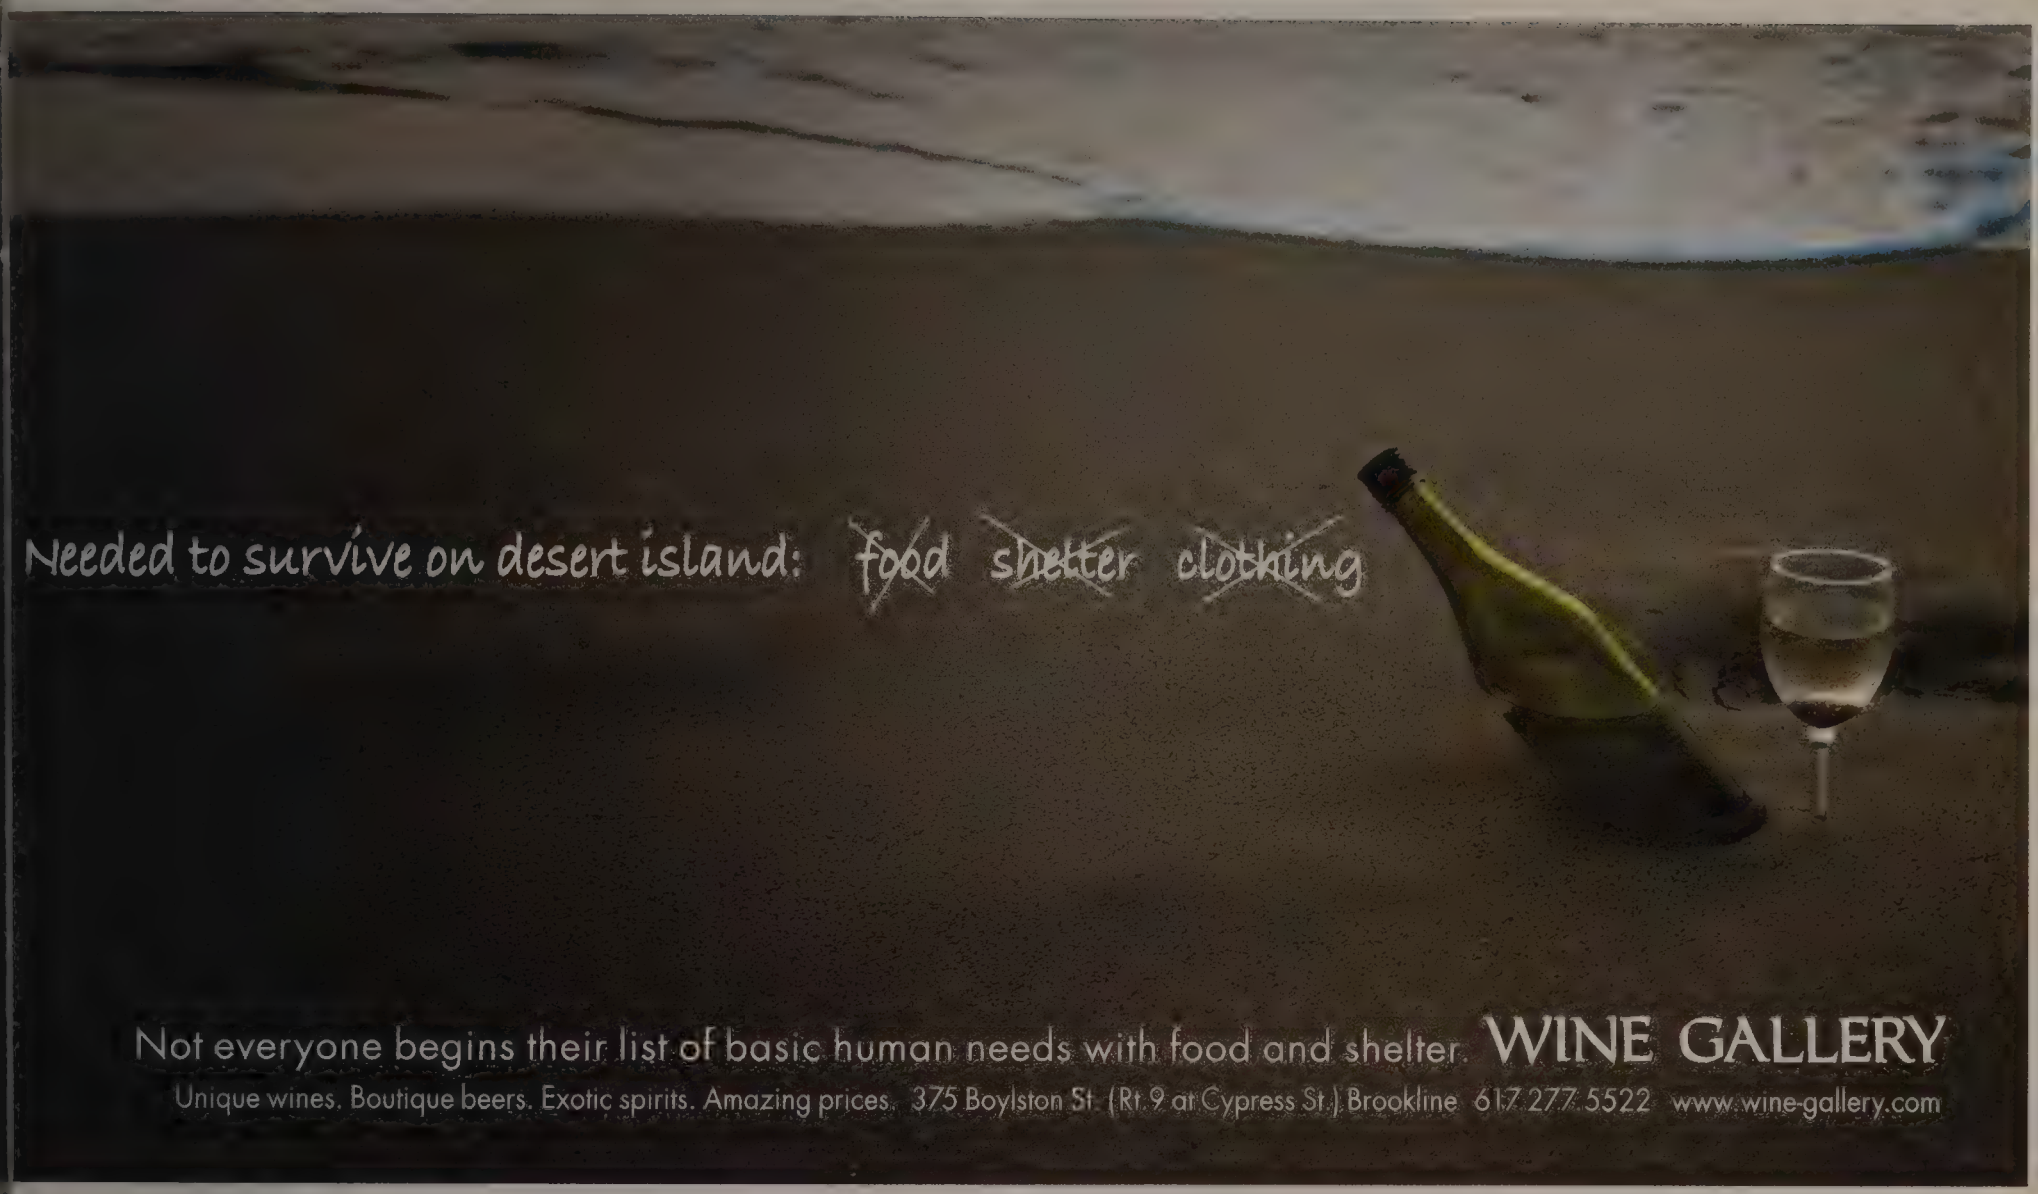
Notable local writers explore 21st-century Boston in The Good City.

By way of celebrating, describing, limning the particularities of various parts of Boston, this book contains essays, each with its own idiosyncratic tilt, by such local writers as Susan Orlean (The Orchid Thief; the movie Adaptation), architecture critic Robert Campbell, Michael Patrick MacDonald (All Souls) and the rollicking Jack Beatty, who chronicled the outrageous, outsized Boston mayor James Michael Curley in The Rascal King. The essays make you feel the vast, often salty varieties of life here—with jostling ethnic groups adding their spices to the melting pot, each providing distinct flavors to different neighborhoods. MacDonald, who grew up in the projects in Southie and lived there through the busing controversy of the 1970s, speaks for the valuable grit of community—loyalty, shared struggle, and support—even when the place is painted with the gray of poverty. He notes the irony of having become a yuppie in a neighborhood that has gentrified its own locals out of town. Beatty writes with comic vigor about the Irish influx of the 19th century and the friction between the immigrants and the seemingly frigid Protestants they found here. Anita Diamant describes the buzzing Jewish life—religious and cultural—that abounds in "goyish Boston."



MAKE THAT GRAND EXOTIC ENTRANCE

The Renaissance Room opened recently at 215 Newbury St. A sister store to one in Peterborough, N.H., it offers glamorous clothes for women. Call 617-859-9700.



Jacquie Perry, the owner of Renaissance Room, describes her customers as "seriously into drama." What she has here, in golden Italianate surroundings, are clothes so spicy and original, they border on costumes. Specialty high-fashion designers offer exceedingly rarified—yet always fun—dresses, dramatic coats, and long, flowy sensational wraps that somehow exist in several realms at once. Irregularity of hemline and shape is a theme, inviting layering and mystery. All the fabrics here are fascinating—the red silk dress brightly printed with Japanese ladies; others crocheted, seemingly in heaven, from excruciatingly fine yarn; the pieces that frizzle with tiny "eyelash" yarn; and one of many textures, with scads of little fabric samples embedded in folded sections like secret treats. Irregular, almost torn-looking adornments zig-zag down the front of one sexy dress. Another fascinating vestlike piece is made from spongily woven black silk. Renaissance also has purses with a harlequin flavor, blending colorful leather and silk to make a merry pattern. One shopper, transforming herself actress-like, tried on a layered, multiply wrapped dress and achieved an almost Kabuki presence.

GET UP, STAND UP FOR YOUR RIGHTS

Assertiveness Training for Women and Men is a five-week class taught by Helene Goldberg at the Cambridge Center for Adult Education, beginning September 23. Call 617-547-6789. $121.

For various reasons—fear of getting fired, getting dissed, getting rejected, being seen as pushy—many people have trouble speaking up for themselves. The challenge is to find that bright blue slice called assertiveness that sits between the undesirable alternatives of aggressiveness and passivity. Teacher Helene Goldberg, a practicing therapist, helps class members (of both sexes and a wide range of ages) consider their beliefs about themselves that get in the way of speaking out: "I don't deserve it. I'm not smart enough. I don't count. I shouldn't have a voice." The role a person played in their family (discounted youngest, bratty whiner, etc.) may get re-created in grown-up situations. Goldberg—using discussion, role playing and journal writing—gets students to explore and experiment and to improve their skills of assertion. Though it is always chewy, miserable fun to complain about the mean boss or slouchy, uncooperative mate, Goldberg focuses more on strategizing, practicing and working from strength. Sometimes returning to the site of failed assertiveness with an "I've been thinking..." approach can be powerful. The desired outcome (say, a raise) may not come immediately, but the change in the asserter's stance is the significant thing.

Ballotine of free-range chicken with black summer truffles and creamless-cream corn

A number of ethnic eateries line Main Street in Cambridge between Kendall and Central squares. La Groceria and Bertucci's cover the Italian front, while Cuchi Cuchi, extravagantly trimmed in art deco style, touches most culinary corners of the globe in eclectically cosmopolitan fashion. The new owners of Salts, Analia Verolo and Gabriel Bremer, have cast their culinary lot with the French. While the restaurant's atmosphere can be described as "country French," its cuisine is refined and urbane. Such refinement comes at a price: Salts' menu prices exceed those of the old Salts by some 30 to 50 percent, placing it in a league with Back Bay and downtown restaurants rather than with its more down-to-earth neighbors. But the quality of Salts' food, with very few exceptions, delivers value for these prices.

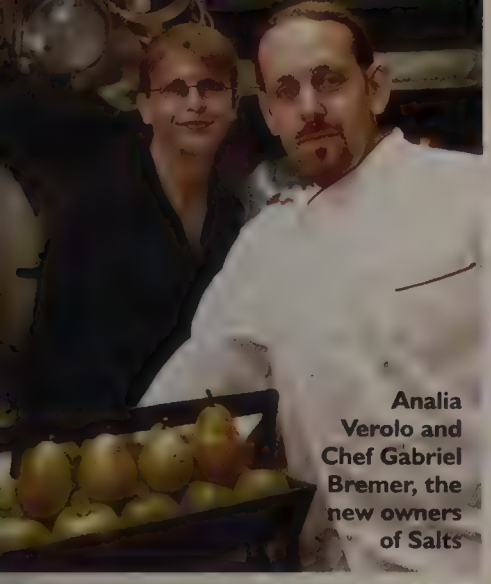
Hard-crusted, mildly sourdough French rolls, baked in Salts' own kitchen, started the dining experience on a positive note. Soft, sweet butter, studded with a few crystals of sea salt, arrived under elegant, silver minicloches. Soon after serving the bread, the waiters brought tiny, teasing tastes from the kitchen. One night, these treats consisted of tiny slices of veal tongue, its interesting taste and texture highlighted by a garnish of minigreens. A subsequent night brought a cube of fresh, sweet watermelon with a dollop of goat cheese on top and a dab of balsamic vinegar alongside. Both served their function of stimulating the appetite and heightening anticipation for what followed.



Of the appetizers, the hamachi with aromatic herbs and lemon-coriander vinaigrette ($13) took first prize. Three stunningly presented slices of sashimi-quality yellowtail, cured in salt and herbs, virtually melted in the mouth, leaving pleasant lingering aftertastes of the protein-rich fish and its provocative herbal enhancements. Roasted quail with Moroccan spices and couscous ($12) featured crispy, pleasantly salty skin and mildly gamy flesh. The couscous was richly flavored, with aromatic root vegetables and warm Mediterranean herbs. The priciest of the appetizers, the pan-roasted foie gras ($18), had a buttery richness and satiny texture that made me regret the portion was so meager. A garnish of pitted cherries and beet and cherry sorbet provided a refreshing contrast to the savory intensity of the liver.

The least expensive appetizers turned out to be a pair of salads. The lamb's lettuce with Anjou pear and local goat cheese ($8) presented an imaginative range of tastes and textures, with the sweet succulence of the pear enhanced by the sharp bite of the goat cheese. The second salad, described as baby greens with a brunoise of summer vegetables, poached quail eggs and black truffle vinaigrette ($8), turned out to be a wild thicket of coarse greens that obscured the remainder of the ingredients. Far better were the heirloom tomatoes ($12), at once sweet and tart in flavor and firm yet juicy in texture.

The main courses included one that disappointed and five that vied for superlatives. While I have usually found the flavor of Australian lamb too strong and gamy, Salts' rack of organic Australian lamb ($33) was actually bland, and its lack of flavor was paralleled by a disappointing texture. Also, in contrast to the ample portions of most of Salts' offerings—with the foie gras a noteworthy exception—this rack consisted of only three chops, reminding me of the old joke: "The food was not very good, and the portions were so small."

In contrast to the lamb, the fig-stuffed Niman Ranch pork tenderloin with arugula and hazelnut "polenta" ($29) turned out to be one of the finest dishes I've enjoyed in some time. Pork tenderloin is often problematic—when carelessly handled, it has a tendency to become dry and boring. Salts' pork tenderloin boasted impeccable texture, tender and juicy, and cooked rare as ordered. The mellow sweetness and grainy texture of the figs contributed a texture counterpoint. The promised "hazelnut polenta" was not true polenta (corn) at all, but rather a mild starch consisting probably of hazelnut flour, with a subtle, seductive flavor. Day-boat halibut with clams, fava beans, house-cured pancetta and lemon thyme ($27) brought an excellent piece of firm-fleshed, fresh-tasting fish. The canopy of littleneck clams on the half shell covering the halibut contributed the dominant flavor to the dish—so dominant, that the promised pancetta went undetected. Unlike the perfectly textured fish, the fava beans could have used a few more minutes of heat since they carried al dente to an extreme.

The ballotine of free-range chicken ($26) delighted the eye with another win some presentation. Consisting of white and dark meat boned and rolled around savory, herb-infused stuffing and then roasted to a golden turn, it was sliced into three moist, tender, flavorful cylinders topped with a dice of carrots and black summer truffles and mounted on a base of "creamless-cream corn"—tender, sweet corn with the texture of cream corn but without the liquid. Perhaps the most spectacular of Salts' presentations—and a performance that by itself was worth the price of admission—was the whole roasted duck for two ($60). Tableside service flourishes have all but disappeared, even in fancy restaurants, making the elegant tableside carving of Salts' roast duck all the more impressive. The magnificent creature was presented on a platter, surrounded by a cornucopia of turnips, carrots and onions. The crackling crisp skin encased rich, moist flesh of incomparable flavor. The formidable bird yielded enough meat to be savored by our entire table of six.

Analia Verolo and Chef Gabriel Bremer, the new owners of Salts

Lemon soufflé tart with frozen lemon curd and raspberry compote

Cured hamachi with aromatic herbs and lemon-coriander vinaigrette

Desserts included an apricot tart tatin ith lemon thyme pot de crème and cham-agne sorbet ($10). The resilient texture nd distinctive sweet flavor of the apricots ent well with the offbeat-sounding but rprisingly delicious creamy custard that ombined the herbal nuances of thyme ith the citrusy pucker of lemon. A tiny oop of sorbet added a refreshing, intrigu-gly flavored treat. Lemon soufflé tart ith frozen lemon curd and raspberry com-te ($9) married the tart sweetness of oked and frozen lemon with the vibrant avors of plump, juicy raspberries and lackberries—not really a compote, but ther fresh berries as nature made them. nally, the warm chocolate cake with Ju-or Mint ice cream and chocolate mint appe ($9) trod a familiar path but with awless perfection. Using a high-quality hocolate—I later learned it was South merican in origin—the chef's baking recision yielded a light confection with a olten bittersweet chocolate center.

Salts' wine list needs work. Despite a rfeit of decent table wines on the market at wholesale for under $80 a case (which e house could price affordably while still aking a respectable markup), Salts' list s few choices under $40. The least ex-nsive red, a serviceable but ordinary 00 Bordeaux Supérieur named Chateau ecougne ($35), had good structure, and dry, almost austere character made it a asonably good companion to the range of ods we ordered. On the other hand, the lsatian pinot blanc ($35) disappointed in flabby character, needing acid and struc-ture. Wine by the glass at Salts was even higher priced, but there was a selection of beers, including the palatable, medium-weight Brooklyn Brown Ale ($4).

Service at Salts verged on perfection, with a friendly, attentive, professionally skillful staff, particularly the waiter who carved our duck. On the other hand, when the dining room filled up, the pressure on Salts' small kitchen may have taken its toll—the wait between main courses and dessert one evening exceeded a reasonable interval, wholly inconsistent with the perfect pacing of the meal to that point. Salts' physical appointments provide an engaging dining environment. Track lighting along the high ceiling illuminates stucco-textured gray walls hung with huge, wood-framed mirrors and some artwork with vibrant colors. Crisp white tablecloths and absorbent white cotton napkins, heavy tableware, giant stemware, and large white plates and bowls of various shapes and sizes—square, round, oval—adorn the tables, and smart, comfortable, black Windsor chairs provide the seating.

Salts' reincarnation under the stewardship of Verolo and Bremer constitutes a substantial addition to Greater Boston's fine-dining resources. Its upscale aspirations, matched by its upscale prices in a downscale neighborhood, put pressure on its talented chef and congenial hostess to provide the quality and consistency that patrons from across the city who are willing to pay those prices will demand. So far, they appear to be succeeding. IB

HONEY DAY

It's not every day that honey lovers get to show their love for the condiment that gives an extra kick to their daily tea or yogurt, but chef/beekeeper Mike Graney provides an opportunity on Sunday, August 29, at the fourth annual Honey Day. From noon until 4 pm, at the Leland Street Community Garden in Jamaica Plain, guests can enjoy live music while sampling different types of honey and light refreshments, including mead, a honey wine. Graney, a chef at Pemberton Farms in Cambridge, donates all the day's proceeds from the sale of local honey (last year he sold 75 pounds' worth) toward helping to preserve and enhance urban beekeeping. *15 Leland St. Jamaica Plain (617-633-0235). DISH

No Small Rolls

From Bombay to baguettes…Mariposa wings it…Il Panino to rise again

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

The announcement that chef Thomas John had left Mantra was no big surprise. After all, he'd made a well-deserved splash with his exotic and delicious Indian/French menus and had put in long hours to establish Mantra as an ongoing hot spot downtown. What came as a shock was his new position: executive chef at Boston-based café/bakery chain Au Bon Pain. Clearly, John was thinking way outside the hookah den.

Sometimes, though, pragmatism trumps glamour. John has two kids, and a corporate-chef job offers a more family-friendly schedule. And talent is transferable, so score one for Au Bon Pain. Meanwhile, heading up Mantra's kitchen will be Phil Carolan and Ernie Quinones. Quinones, originally Mantra's pastry chef, certainly has the energy and imagination (bleu cheese ice cream, anyone?) to qualify for the job. We'll keep you posted.

Pastry chef Ernie Quinones is now helping to head up Mantra's kitchen.

SECOND COURSE

D'ough!: Several weeks after opening Mariposa, owner Suzanne Mermelstein reports business is "going well" at her bakery café in Cambridge's Central Square...despite a lack of signage. "We still don't have our signs up," sighed Mermelstein, "but we get a lot of walk-by traffic." While the café counter is still awaiting its stools, the 30-plus table seats are open Monday through Friday from 7 am to 7 pm, and Saturday until 5 pm. Early birds favor the breakfast pizza, which involves roasted-tomato salsa, pesto and a scrambled egg baked on top, served with a sprinkle of parmesan. Pretzels—which, as Mermelstein points out, are prepared like bagels, boiled then baked—are available in small and large sizes, the latter used for sandwiches such as roast turkey with aged Gouda and aioli.

Il Panino on Franklin Street, recently closed after 12 years, won't be an empty space for long. Owner Frank de Pasquale is already gearing up to reopen his five-level eatery and nightspot in the fall with new decor, a new theme (still Italian-related, of course—that's his bread and butter) and, most likely, a big party.

Grill 23 & Bar has appointed Alex DeWinter as its new wine director DeWinter, who polished his skills under former wine director and Bordeaux native Nathalie Vache, plans to expand the restaurant's collection of Spanish and Italian wines. DeWinter will also work with executive chef Jay Murray on the Grill's upcoming "Second Saturdays at Grill 23," a program of wine-tasting and cooking classes. Vache, by the way, recently moved to Alaska with her fiancé, which makes one wonder: Which wine best complements roasted moose?

Speaking of red meat, expect Smith & Wollensky to open its doors September 7 with former Grill 23 private-dining manager Paige Reed assuming the same position at the castle...Congratulations to newlyweds Tony Maws and Karoly Feeks, owner/chef and general manager respectively, of Craigie Street Bistro. Fun fact: At the prenuptial barbecue festivities, dessert was a cake constructed of Krispy Kreme doughnuts. IB

CityScope: Calling for a Cure

Even more inspiring than a 40–home run season, a breakaway goal or a Super Bowl ring is the way our local pro athletes come together for a good cause. On August 27, they come through again, as SportsRadio WEEI, NESN and the Red Sox team up for the Jimmy Fund Radiothon. A star-studded lineup of players from the Bruins, Celtics, Pats and Sox, plus Jimmy Fund doctors and patients, converge on Fenway for the third annual day-long event. You can tune-in from home (at WEEI-AM 850 or NESN) and catch interviews with Donald Trump, Michael J. Fox, Ben Affleck and Matt Damon, among others. But for those who'd rather be front and center for the action, there are a couple of fun special events: "How to Build a Champion," a breakfast Q&A session with Sox GM Theo Epstein, Patriots VP of player personnel Scott Pioli, Celtics executive director of basketball operations Danny Ainge and Bruins GM Mike O'Connell, takes place at Fenway's .406 Club from 8 to 9:30 am, and admission is $150. Later, from 12 to 2:30 pm, WEEI's Dale Arnold and Bob Neumeier host "A Bird's Eye View of Fenway," which features lunch with a panel of Red Sox players, plus an insider's tour of Fenway Park, for $200. Those with extra-large appetites (sports and otherwise) can purchase a Double Play ticket for $300 that includes both the breakfast and lunch events. WEEI director of programming and operations Jason Wolfe hopes to raise at least $1 million, but even if you can't make it to Fenway for the festivities, your money's just as green at home. Pledges are accepted over the phone and online between 6 am and midnight. Call 617-632-3861 for tickets, or log on to www.jimmyfundradio.org. Pledges accepted at 877-738-1234.

Savion Glover performs at Tanglewood

SAT./SEPT. 4

Performing Arts: Tap Happy

One man's an octogenarian; the other's just over 30. Dancers Jimmy Slyde and Savion Glover have been wowing audiences for decades, and this year the two living legends bring their signature tap styles to the Tanglewood Jazz Festival. Slyde, born Jimmy Gotbolt, began tapping in the 1930s and '40s and became so well-known for floating and sliding across the stage that he changed his name. Glover, who was once called "the greatest tap dancer to ever lace up a pair of Capezios" by the late, great Gregory Hines, has showcased his improvisational moves on Broadway (The Tap Dance Kid; Bring in 'Da Noise, Bring in 'Da Funk), on the big screen (Tap, Bamboozled) and even on Sesame Street. The two artists first appeared on stage together 17 years ago at the Great Woods Jazz Festival. Now together again in an all-jazz program, they tap out to the music of John Coltrane, Miles Davis and George Gershwin performed by a live quintet. Tanglewood Theatre, 297 West St., Lenox. (888-266-1200). www.bso.org. 1 pm, $45.

MON./AUG. 30

Performing Arts: Time to Tango

Every full moon during the summer, the footbridge near Harvard Square fills up with people twirling, twisting and turning in the moonlight. At Tango by Moonlight, a free monthly event put on by the Tango Society of Boston, tango teachers show off their moves and offer lessons in the seductive Argentinean dance. A live DJ plays a range of tango-friendly music—in addition to the traditional tango tunes there's salsa, swing, rock and sometimes Turkish and folk music. The instructors tell us that it doesn't necessarily take two to tango, as only about 40 percent of the participants are couples (so there's good chance for singles to make a moonlit match). If you get into the swing of things, so to speak, the moonlight sessions continue through September. 8 pm. Weeks Memorial Footbridge (corner of DeWolfe Street and Memorial Drive), Cambridge (617-413-2981). www.bostontango.org. Rain date: Aug. 31. Free.

FRI./AUG. 27

CityScope: Dancing on the Ceiling

For lots of us over the ripe old age of 25, finding a place to go dancing in Boston isn't an easy task—at least if you want to leave at the end of the night with your hearing intact. But on a handful of upcoming nights, the Ritz-Carlton Boston is opening its rooftop to its dining room guests for Puttin' on the Ritz, a swing-dance night where jump-jiving guys and gals groove to the sounds of the eight piece Ritz-Carlton Orchestra playing covers of big-band greats. It makes for a nice dose of nostalgia—you can almost imagine yourself in a zoot suit or saddle shoes back in the 1930s and '40s, when the Ritz's rooftop was abuzz with summer activity and drew big name musical acts like Benny Goodman, the Dorseys and Glenn Miller. If you can't make this date, you've still got a few more opportunities—additional Puttin' on the Ritz events are scheduled for September 10, 24 and October 8. 15 Arlington St., Boston (800-241-3333). www.ritzcarlton.com. 8 pm–12 am. $25 (in addition to the price of a meal).

Paul Clement is featured in the documentary Plagues & Pleasures of the Salton Sea.

FRI./AUG. 27–SUN./AUG. 29

Movies: Faneuil Films

As far as we know, the first annual Zoinks! Film Festival is the only movie fest that's dubbed itself "wicked cool." Sponsored by local toy store Zoinks!, it's also the only indie film fest to host indoor and outdoor screenings at one of the nation's most-visited tourist attractions, Faneuil Hall Marketplace. Animated shorts, features, documentaries and children's films by local, national and international filmmakers screen during the weekend, and highlights include Juvies, a documentary about youth prisons narrated by Mos Def and Mark Wahlberg; Rutland, USA, a Naked Gun–style detective comedy; and Plagues & Pleasure on the Salton Sea, a documentary about a polluted California lake and the people who choose to live around it. Screenings take place at the Comedy Connection, Cheers and a tented screening area in the West Market. Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston (617-227-6266). www.zoinksfilmfestival.com. 10 am–10 pm. Free. ($20 all-access pass includes admission to all films, priority seating and admission to three after parties with filmmakers.)

Summer of the Striders

Local running club finishes up summer race series with fun-filled event.

For most of us, a brisk 4.2-mile run isn't the first choice for an after-work get-together with friends. But this summer, the Somerville Striders Athletic Club has taken the dreaded art of exercise and turned it into a party.

On Thursday, August 26, the Striders host the Brie Burger in Paradise Run & Tailgate Party, the final installment of their 2004 "Let's Run, Have Fun and Be Fit" summer race series. Striders events are more than mere gallops along the Charles, though. After each race, runners kick off their cross-trainers and get ready to party, as sponsor Harpoon Brewery headlines a postrun celebration that includes great food, beverages and musical performances. The finale party features the Electric Parrots, a Jimmy Buffett cover band.

The Brie Burger in Paradise Run takes off along the Charles Aug. 26

"We're trying to do something a little different than a lot of the other clubs," says Striders founder Paulie Collyer. "We mix health and fitness with fun and relaxation, and there's just an incredible amount of energy."

Runs are open to participants of all ages and abilities (you can even walk the course if running proves too strenuous) but runners must register before race night. So be sure to get online early and get a spot. Need a little more time to get in condition? Check the club's Web site for info on fall races, including the Blues Run & Big Pig BBQ and the Boogie Woogie 5K, both part of the City Sports' Twin Cities Fall Race Series.

Race begins and ends at 5 Greenough Blvd. (Eliot Bridge), Cambridge (617-625-2140). www.baevents.com. Aug. 26, 6:30 pm. $18. —Rich Levine

Donnie Longo

Donnie Darko returns, but why the tweaking?

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The new "director's cut" of Donnie Darko, starring Jena Malone and Jake Gyllenhaal, adds 20 minutes to the 2001 original.

Donnie Darko is one of the last great American movies. There hasn't been an American fictional film as creative or interesting as this debut from writer-director Richard Kelly in the nearly three years since it trickled into theaters. But as the old saying goes, if it ain't broke, don't fix it.

And Donnie wasn't broke. In fact, it did pretty well, considering the circumstances surrounding its release. Its distributor orphaned it in late 2001, after opening it in a handful of cities and failing to draw much of an audience. The layered story and the fact that it was a post-9/11 release in which an airplane mishap figures in the plot made it a tough sell, for sure, but Donnie was no mere nonstarter.

Late that year, when I tried to track down tapes of it for the Boston Society of Film Critics to check out before our annual awards voting, the distributors and production companies I spoke with weren't just unable to help, they practically disavowed any knowledge of the movie, as if it were the troubled movie no one speaks of. We finally got tapes, but they arrived with a vague return address, as if someone sent them on the sly.

Despite the meager theatrical exposure and lack of a marketing push, however, Donnie Darko's blend of 1988-set suburban teen comedy, time-travel eeriness and social satire developed a following at midnight shows in big cities, and on DVD, even though the disc's misleading packaging touts it as a teen horror picture. Then, Michael Andrews and Gary Jules' haunting version of Tears for Fears' "Mad World," which plays at the film's climax, became a number one hit in England in 2003 and a radio hit in the U.S.

There are plenty of reasons Donnie Darko beat the odds to become an independent sleeper hit. Its title character (played with charisma by Jake Gyllenhaal) is a smart, troubled teen who's much more genuine than most movies' phony adolescents. Its satiric attack on suburban insecurity (manifested in reactionary politics and self-help cure-alls) is hilarious, and Donnie's emotional journey is an unusual one involving time travel, first love and a 6-foot tall rabbit named Frank. The movie's a heady stew that's not fully digestible, but very tasty.

So why screw with it? The return of Donnie Darko comes not in the version that struck an emotional chord in so many, but in Donnie Darko: The Director's Cut, a new version running 20 minutes longer. Except this isn't a true "director's cut"—the 133-minute version never existed before now.

To be blunt, if you haven't seen Donnie Darko, the shorter version is a better introduction; if you have, you've probably seen the added stuff already. Most of the restored footage comes from deleted scenes on the Donnie Darko DVD; Kelly also inserted graphics from the Philosophy of Time Travel book that Donnie reads, which were also among the DVD extras (and on the movie's Web site). But the book's pages, meant to add insight into the time travel element of the story, appear on screen so briefly they add nothing. In fact, they make Donnie Darko less comprehensible, by making the viewer think they should understand more.

But expecting Donnie Darko to be totally coherent is to miss the point. For one thing, it surely isn't a vision of a coherent world (what's the name of that Tears for Fears song that gets covered at the end?). For another, isn't this movie supposed to be an antidote to studio movies that get test-screened to death and edited according to the dictates of focus groups? And isn't its hero's struggle about trusting your intuition and remaining true to yourself, not about going back and second-guessing things?

The 2001 version was a little shorter than the one that premiered at the Sundance Film Festival, but that's often the case with movies that premiere at Sundance and later get a national release. In an October 2001 interview with Indiewire.com, writer-director Kelly said, "I'm really grateful to have had the time to really finish the film." But now he's even gone back to change some of the music to what he originally wanted but couldn't afford on the film's budget, including replacing Echo & the Bunnymen's "The Killing Moon," a great opening scene-setter, with an INXS song (the Bunnymen song is heard briefly in a party scene in the new cut).

But wait a minute. Kelly originally wanted U2's "MLK" at the climax, not "Mad World." So why didn't he replace that too? I wish Kelly put more faith in the old adage about most good art being a happy accident. Sure, more people should see Donnie Darko. But I don't know if messing with a good thing is a philosophy this movie, or anything else, should indulge in. This director's cut is so un–Donnie Darko. iB

New Releases

The Bourne Supremacy ★★★
Like the original Bourne Identity, the sequel is smart popcorn movie with taut action, gray y oddly exotic Eurolocations and a distaste for th usual showiness of the Hollywood action-thrille Matt Damon's Jason Bourne is still trying to figu out who he is, and exactly what functions he pe formed for the CIA, who suddenly wanted him ve dead the first time around. When another attempt made on his life, he suspects the agency is targeti him again, so he goes on the offensive against Cl investigator Joan Allen and higher-up Brian Co There's a bit of typecasting in the movie's villair and I was expecting more character developme this time, but Damon pulls off the role of unlike hero again. Action with a conscience—what a co cept. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Collateral ★★★
Michael Mann knows how to make good, styli thrillers, and the director of Thief and Manhunt (and creator of TV's Miami Vice and Crime Stor shows it again in his latest. It's the story of a Los A geles cab driver (Jamie Foxx) whose fare (To Cruise) turns out to be a ruthless hit man who forc the cabbie to shuttle him to a series of murder a signments. Foxx is the real star here, and his live performance provides the movie's moral center, a though—like Vin Diesel—Cruise proves to be mo convincing as an insensitive creep than he has be as a hero. The second half's action sequences can overblown, particularly a dustup in a Korean-Am ican nightclub, but by then the plot has enou going on to keep you hooked. (At Boston Commc Fenway and suburbs.)

Fahrenheit 9/11 ★★★½
Rabble-rouser Michael Moore's passionate deco struction of the second Bush administration has knockout revelations about its controversial polici so don't expect smoking guns. Its ultimate target the war in Iraq, but the movie presents the war as j the latest in a pattern of self-serving, law-skirting l havior. Moore comes up with inspired ways of getti his points across about much-debated Bush polic and conflicts of interest. He's onscreen less than was in Roger & Me, The Big One and Bowling Columbine, yet he argues his points better than Columbine. Moore hits his targets because, despite political aims, he makes you feel like you're watch a movie, not a political rant, and his sense of hun really shines through. (At Boston Common, Harv Square, Coolidge Corner and suburbs.)

Garden State ★★½
The first film by actor-director Zach Braff (T Scrubs) has its moments of daffy humor, as B plays a struggling L.A. actor who returns to his N Jersey hometown for the first time in nine years. T movie recaptures the mixed emotions of such a vi especially of seeing old high school friends, bu treads on very familiar territory. It feels like it wa to be a version of The Graduate directed by Wes A derson (Rushmore), and it struggles to find any vo of its own. Plus, the story of a guy returning to hometown who develops a quick bond with a talie Portman character has already been done 1996's Beautiful Girls. Braff and Portman hav pleasing chemistry, and Braff is to be commended trying to make something quirky and personal. it's hard not to feel this movie is redundant. Loews, Boston Common and Kendall Square.)

Metallica: Some Kind of Monster ★★★
It's interesting enough to keep nonfans of he metal involved, though this 145-minute docum tary about the making of Metallica's St. Anger all is longer than it needs to be. What's interesting is the latest by directors Joe Berlinger and Bruce Si sky (Paradise Lost) is the most psychological of t movies. Literally. Reeling from the deterioratio their personal relationships, the band's three members enter counseling with a "performance hancement therapist" and strive to make the ba democracy, so their Dr. Phil–like shrink is there a the recording sessions—sometimes easing tensi sometimes adding to them. As drummer Lars Ul sums it up, those sessions are an attempt to make gressive music without negative energy," which easy, especially when macho frontman James Het (who enters rehab during the sessions) and the r emotional Ulrich keep struggling for control of band. They should've called this 12 Steps to M (At Copley Place.)

Open Water ★★★
No stars, no special effects—no problem. Wr director Chris Kentis builds old-fashioned tensi his tale of a stressed-out L.A. couple who take cation in the tropics and go on a scuba tour, only to be left behind in shark-infested waters by the tour boat. Yikes. The shooting style and the actors (Daniel Travis and Blanchard Ryan play the couple) are raw enough that the movie almost feels like a home video (it was shot on digital video). And when the trip turns into a life-threatening ordeal and shark fins start slicing through the nearby waters, the action has a frightening intimacy. A much needed boost of low-tech moviemaking at the multiplex. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Riding Giants ★★★

Stacy Peralta goes from sidewalk surfing to the watery kind here. The skateboarder-turned-moviemaker focused on the 1970s skate innovations that he was a part of in 2002's dynamite Dogtown & Z-Boys. Now he offers a documentary whose title has a double meaning: The surfers he profiles are indeed larger-than-life figures, while riding giants is exactly what they do. The movie splits into three sections: one on 1950s pioneers, the second on 1970s Bay Area surfers and the last on today's Laird Hamilton. The first section is clearly the best. The 20 or so late-'50s surfers who headed to Hawaii to surf come across like The Right Stuff's elite test pilots—guys who were competitively pushing each other but were bound together like a surrogate family. (At Boston Common.)

Suspect Zero ★½

Has Hollywood decreed that Aaron Eckhart—who's made solid supporting contributions to good movies like Erin Brockovich and The Pledge—will only be allowed to star in sucky movies like The Core and this dull Seven wannabe? This is one of those killer-sending-messages-to-the-detective thrillers that can't manage an interesting hero or villain, so all that's left is just the gore. The murderer playing cat and mouse with Eckhart's FBI agent is a one-time FBI-employed psychic who should've been interesting, but Ben Kingsley plays him too hard and lets little humanity seep through. It's the date movie of the year—if you're in the Manson family. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Village ★★★

Like a lot of the movies by M. Night Shyamalan (Sixth Sense), his latest includes a major plot twist that may turn you off. But most of what comes before the twist is so interesting and intriguing that the grimly fiendish, Twilight Zone–esque tale of a late-19th century rural enclave survives the sudden onslaught of plot complications. The enclave's inhabitants live by the superstition that the woods surrounding them are filled with predatory creatures ("those we don't speak of" in the village's parlance) and that any contact with the outer world will be detrimental to the village. While big twists are a crutch on which Shyamalan often relies, it's refreshing to see a movie that builds and slowly avoids the instant gratification and spoon-feeding of most Hollywood releases. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

We Don't Live Here Anymore ★★

But, then again, who'd want to live where this cold drama takes place? This story of the indiscretion-filled love lives of best-friend professors (Mark Ruffalo and Peter Krause) and their wives (Laura Dern and Naomi Watts) is one big neurotic twitch given a stuffy air by its academic setting and director John Curran's use of classical music. The story examines what happens when one of the pals has an affair with the other's wife, but it never really gets inside the heads of its characters, and Ruffalo and Watts are given little chance to exude much sexual chemistry together. Bob & Carol & Ted & Alice it ain't. (At Copley Place and Embassy Waltham.)

Zhou Yu's Train ★½

It's been far too long since soulful Chinese beauty Gong Li (Raise the Red Lantern) has graced local screens. But her talent can't overcome the unconvincing, overwrought romantic drama in director Zhou Sun's tale of ceramics painter Zhou Yu's relationship with a self-conscious poet (Tony Leung Ka Fai). His poetry is the thing that makes her fall for him but, as is almost always the case, poetry just seems silly in a movie. The ineffective, nonchronological storytelling doesn't help. Nor does the movie's overuse of the train Zhou Yu rides as a symbolic tool. The movie even uses the old cliché of a surging train during a sex scene—ouch. (At Kendall Square.)

Gong Li plays a ceramics artist in the Chinese drama Zhou Yu's Train.

Eternal Values

Branford Marsalis pursues a different form of intensity.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

When the Branford Marsalis Quartet tackled John Coltrane's immortal "A Love Supreme" for its 2002 disc Footsteps of Our Fathers, reaction was mixed. "It's the only piece of religious music I've ever encountered where people feel it shouldn't be played," Marsalis says. "I guess it's superior to Bach's masses and Mozart's Requiem and Handel's Messiah? That's basically a copout, 'cause if you don't have to play it, you don't have to deal with how effective you are."

Marsalis and his quartet play two upcoming area shows to support their new disc, Eternal

Beyond an effective performance, the move marked a turning point for his longtime quartet. "It's the main reason we sound as good together as we do now," says the saxophonist, who improved his technique, for starters. "I had to get more sound on the instrument, because to play with that kind of sustained intensity for 35 minutes is something, man." But he also sought to uncover the emotional focus in the music, pursue a better understanding of the blues behind that jazz classic and cultivate a different form of intensity.

That more subtle intensity was developed on the quartet's last CD, Romare Bearden Revealed (inspired by the work of visual artist Bearden), and blossoms on Eternal, a ballads collection arriving September 14 on the Marsalis Music label.

"You want to have that kind of intensity even as a ballad," he says. "If loud and intense were the same, you wouldn't need two words. You can play loud and not be intense, and you can play loud and intense, and play soft and intense."

"We all grow up with the idea of playing fast," Marsalis, 43, says from his North Carolina home. "We wanted to get away from the idea of using songs as vehicles to solo, and actually try to get to some sort of emotional understanding of a song.

"Unlike a lot of people, jazz to me is significantly more than improvisatory music," says Marsalis, who plays September 5 at the Tanglewood Jazz Festival and October 3 at Sanders Theatre with co-composers Jeff "Tain" Watts (drums), Eric Revis (bass) and Joey Calderazzo (piano). "What makes these guys special is they're conceptualists. I try to be one myself. And Eternal is probably the most difficult record we've ever played."

"We're not trying to bring back the old style, but you can use that as a foundation to do what it is that we do," he says, and bringing in each musician's personal perspective is part of that. "As opposed to jazz in the '50s and '60s, when all the musicians had a lot of personality, we're just a bunch of nerds, and that's one of the reasons why jazz is so unpopular," he says. "There has been an overwhelming focus on the intellectual aspects of the music.

"Popular music, when it's done well, has a certain kind of emotional immediacy that you can't find in jazz anymore," says Marsalis, who has worked with Sting and the Grateful Dead and led the jazz/hip-hop collective Buckshot LeFonque in addition to his jazz and classical projects. In fact, the job with Sting was educational for the Berklee graduate.

"In my second year of college, I decided that I wanted to play jazz and got so involved in the intricacies of the music that it was very difficult for me to play solos," he says. "I'd go on and on but could never find my way out of them. In Sting's band, I'd get 30 seconds, period. You have to get while the getting's good. A year and a half of that really helped me. I came back with this intensity."

By that point, he already had a reputation in jazz circles as a prominent member of a well-known New Orleans musical family. In 2003, he teamed with his father Ellis (piano) and his brothers Wynton (trumpet), Delfeayo (trombone) and Jason (drums) for a PBS special that led to a CD and tour.

"It wasn't done sooner because it was expected," he says. "We just happened to grow up in a town where people love playing music. There was no special magic trick [my dad] did. We were exposed to instruments and we played them."

The Marsalis Family: A Jazz Celebration became another landmark for Cambridge-based Marsalis Music, which also boasts recent CDs by country-jazz guitarist Doug Wamble, pianist Harry Connick Jr. (without vocals), and alto saxophonist Miguel Zenon. Those leaders' quartets will join Marsalis' at Tanglewood for a 2 pm program at Seiji Ozawa Hall.

"It's based on a belief," Marsalis says of the label. "It's going to be a long time before we see a return on our investment. But I'm the perfect guy for it. I don't worry much about money. I'll be dead one day and I won't be able to take any of this shit with me. But those records will endure, and that's good enough for me." iB

Great Chow Guy

You: tall, with a goatee, wearing a greenish (closer to olive) Titleist baseball hat. You were picking up food before walking home. I was the girl with the strawberry-blond hair and green eyes. I was there having dinner with my family and couldn't pull myself away to come over and talk to you before you were gone! Maybe we could meet up sometime over some fortune cookies.

—xrandomgirl@yahoo.com

9th-Floor Guy

Our encounters this year have been brief but memorable. The first time we engaged in pleasant conversation at the 57 bus stop in front of the White Dove cleaners in Allston. The second time was on the elevator of the building in which we both live. If I had known which apartment was yours, I would have stopped by on the 9th floor rather than continuing one floor up. I would like to continue the conversation we started. E-mail me if you're interested.

It was nice to see a friendly smile on 93 North into Boston so early in the morning (about 6 am). Thanks for the smiles.

To the Girl Reading Dressing the Man at Au Bon Pain

We were in Harvard Square and you were wearing a blue summer dress. We talked briefly about Dressing the Man and Woody Allen, Cary Grant, and Pierce Brosnan. Why I foolishly didn't invite you to sit and chat I don't know—wait, I know why, it's because you looked like you were leaving. And besides, you were a bit dazzling and it made me more bashful than usual, and I smiled for a good half hour before writing in my journal, "Then why didn't you invite her to sit and join ya, ya pudd'n head?!" I do hope you'll write so I can be dazzled again.

You Got Me

Over a year ago I was at Hennessey's and you were standing next to my friends and I at the bar with two of your friends. We ended up talking and I thought you were really cute, funny and artistic. You said you lived in Connecticut, I think, but you come to Boston every now and then. We talked about the Roots and how different your name is. You even took a picture with your camera—hopefully you still have that picture of me, the 5' 2", brown-eyed, brown-haired girl. I never got to tell you that I wanted to see you again and possibly hang out. Your friends were drunk and you ended up leaving, so I didn't get to give you my number or even say goodbye. I've thought about you from time to time, especially whenever the Roots come around. I have since had a boyfriend and it recently ended. I figured I'd try this to see if you're out there. I'm giving fate a nudge and hoping you e-mail me.

—rootingforyoucrty@yahoo.com

Wish I Got Your Number

I met you July 17 at a party in Jamaica Plain. You said your name was Ben and you played rugby. I think you said you go to or graduated from Trinity. You were really cute (tall, shaved head—just my type!) and fun to talk to. I wish I'd asked you for your number, but the night came to an end pretty fast and I didn't. Anyway, I was the brunette in the striped green-and-white shirt. If you want to continue the conversation, send me an e-mail. Hope to talk to you soon.

—Wannadance8178@yahoo.com

Friday, August 6

We spent an impromptu night at the Green Dragon while our friends hit it off. They left and we chatted while you finished your Red Bull. After a long walk back to Charlestown in heels, your incessant torturing of a dog named Beaner or Beans and arguing over who's the best catcher in baseball while watching SportsCenter, you so nicely drove me home so that I wouldn't have to walk in heels again. My only regret is not asking for your phone number. If you'd like to continue our sports argument sometime or grab an iced coffee, send me an e-mail. Include your name and the law school you attended, so I'll know it's you. BTW, Pudge does play for Detroit...

You: (male) beautiful eyes, great smile, sitting in front. Me: (female) blond hair, blue shirt, sitting to your right, a few tables away (behind the piano, facing you). You smiled at me and I forgot all about the show. Your smile still haunts me and I've thought of nothing since. I'm wishing to see you smile again.

Island Queen

We were on the Island Queen August 1. You were distraught about the end of a relationship and we talked about life, love, relationships and more. We shared thoughts and I hope I comforted you somewhat. We talked about work—you, a therapist, and me, a lawyer. As darkness fell and we arrived in Falmouth, we agreed to meet for a glass of something at the Boathouse. But, for whatever reason, and it's not important, you didn't make it there. I'd like to continue the conversation.

—Island.king@comcast.net

Ciao Alec

I met you two years ago this August. I was with a friend at Mistral restaurant, sitting at the bar having an early dinner. You were with your friend Larry. We talked about New York, the south of France, Venice—all my favorite places. I've written this note once before, but now's the time to send it and hopefully you'll see it. It's been a long time, but I can't seem to forget the eye contact we had. Take care,

To Men

To all you men who cry to your girlfriends about how much you love them, yet continue calling other women to flirt and tell them how great they are, how they understand you so well: You are small, scared and insecure. Grow up and stop lying to yourself and everybody else. And to all you women who allow these men to call and who actually believe that their flirtations and "deep" conversations are a sign of true and meaningful affection, remember that while he's talking to you, he's living with her, including her in all aspects of his life (friends, family, holidays, vacations, etc.) and planning his future with her. You are delusional and insecure. Stop answering the phone and stop lying to yourselves! The truth is that eventually the beautiful, loving, good, honest yet naive girlfriend will get wise and leave the boyfriend. Then he'll call you women to release his grief via sex, all the while calling the now-ex girlfriend and begging her to come home.

—Honest Ann

Evite Losers

If I have the courtesy to invite you to a special event or gathering—something I am putting my own personal money, sweat, tears and energy into, then you, friends, could at least have the courtesy to reply yes or no. It's rude not to reply. I feel that in this day and age of technology, Evite replying should be as common sense as wiping front to back after you go poo so as to avoid UTIs.

rockie horoscope

AUGUST 25 – SEPTEMBER 7, 2004 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

VIRGO AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

You're in for a subtle, yet impressive gift from the gods. Whenever your Mercury ruler and the sun meet, helpful ideas tend to come to you like bolts from the blue. You might even experience more than one stunning "Eureka!" moment. Their merger on August 23 can be particularly telling, because retrograde Mercury is crossing the Virgo-Leo cusp, activating the doorway between how you currently see yourself and what has come before. Insights may bubble up from your unconscious that'll forever alter your perception of the past.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

Respect, recognition, perhaps even an award may come your way while your magnetic Venus ruler, in your Cancer midheaven, draws closer to Saturn, the man in charge of everything official. Maintaining the family's good name usually requires a traditional, socially acceptable response, so you could feel obliged to do what's expected of you instead of what you want. Taking the proper steps might not be nearly as difficult as keeping your mouth shut and your temper under control during the wild coaster ride of a full moon on the 29th.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

If there's a crisis building over work or a family issue, expect it to come to a head during the very emotional Pisces full moon. But if all you anticipate is another opportunity to prove your point about a money-making venture, rest assured you'll sail through the tumultuous end of the month without rocking the boat. You should, however, keep an eye on your career and how your boss and your parents view your current accomplishment (or the lack thereof). If they need to blow off steam, be a good boy or girl and let them. Don't answer back.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

Despite the fact that Mercury is retrograde in your house of foreign travel and higher knowledge until September 2, you might be making plans to take off as soon as possible. Throwing caution to the wind raises the odds of having a truly thrilling adventure, one in which everything that could possibly go wrong does. However, while your protective Jupiter ruler resides in your Virgo midheaven, trust that no matter what tests the gods on Mount Olympus put in your path, you'll wind up much wiser—and prosperous too.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Trust your intuition, especially if it alerts you about an investment. An element in your financial picture could be subject to change, although whether it becomes more prominent or fades into the background is uncertain. But then, whenever future-oriented Uranus and the life-sustaining sun vie for supremacy, it's difficult to predict the outcome. Meanwhile, your love life tends to improve the closer affectionate Venus gets to your Saturn ruler. Their meet-cute date in your Cancer marriage house is set for the 31st.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

The kinder, gentler Water-Bearer is in for a surprise when the stickler of a Virgo sun opposes your Uranus ruler on the 27th. But because there's precious little that's predictable about Uranus, the epiphany could come at any moment. Like your Capricorn and Pisces neighbors, you're urged to trust your intuition along with whatever inside info you picked up from the sun-Mercury meeting on the 23rd. A supremely satisfying event may occur when loving Venus merges with stable Saturn as the month ends. Enjoy.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

The desire to do for yourself, to go it alone, is tested again while the willful sun, in your Virgo house of partners, opposes independent Uranus in your sign. You might not react as passionately or impulsively as before, but be aware that you can successfully defend your position with the most accurate information available. Also remind yourself that the Pisces full moon next weekend can be an exceptionally emotional time, and that, if offered a pleasurable outing, e.g., a day at a spa or a ball game, you should take it. A diversionary tactic.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Tempted to court danger just for the sheer hell of it? Headed for any port in the storm except the ones you're familiar with? Memories of what may have happened during the explosive opposition between rebellious Uranus and your impulsive Mars ruler last week can be just as disruptive when the critiquing Virgo sun faces off against Uranus this week. Your desire to cut and run could lead to less-unpredictable endings, but first listen to what the universe is telling you. If you hear the words, "home security system," "family loyalty" or "kitchen update," stay put.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Despite the restrictions you sense closing in on you, you're actually being pulled toward a happier and healthier lifestyle. All the positive planetary activity presently in service-oriented Virgo can broaden your vision and help you find wisdom and joy in places you've neglected to look. This summer could be your most expansive period in over a decade, so even if you have to wait until autumn (after generous Jupiter finishes rewarding all the earth signs) to see any results, table your fear. Keep active, try new things, consult the experts.

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Now would be a good time to deal with an argumentative relative or that annoying neighbor. If you put it off much longer, a simple difference of opinion could escalate into a full-blown battle. So even if you can't make peace, the sooner you say your piece, the better. Besides, because your retrograde Mercury ruler goes back into open-hearted Leo, you might not be as critical of the other guy's point of view. This is also a good time to acquire something that'll make you feel more comfortable at home.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

Forget the beach; the Crab should focus on financial matters—both your personal assets and how you're dealing with other people's money—while that area is being highlighted. Although an innovative, humanitarian approach may have greater appeal, because popular Venus is bonding with tradition-minded Saturn in your sign, taking the tried-and-true route could provide more emotional security, even earn you name recognition. You're in an enviable position, so make the most of whatever unforeseen opportunity pops up as the month ends.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Once solar Leo is over, the pressure to perform on cue, to be the star of the show, can diminish. However, while your sun ruler travels through exacting Virgo, you'd better know for sure what you're saying before you mouth off. These could be tricky times for Lions because, as new opportunities present themselves, having Mercury backpedaling through your sign will strengthen your reliance on familiar rationales. Try to postpone all official acts, such as signing papers or starting a new assignment, until Mercury goes direct on September 2, or better still, leaves Leo for good on the 10th.
